Supervisors' Notice
OF Registration of Voters.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
633-645 TITLE BUILDING
Baltimore, Md., Aug. 14, 1917.

To the Honorable,
The Board of Supervisors of Elections for Garrett County,
Oakland, Md.

Gentlemen:—

I beg to call your Board's attention to the fact that by the Act of 1916, Chap. 569, codified as Section 17A of Article 33 of Bagby's Code, and as Section 17A in the 1917 Pamphlet of the Election Laws of Maryland, a registration is required to be held in each of the counties of the State on the Tuesday preceding primary election day. As primary election day this year falls on Tuesday, September 11th, this registration will be held on Tuesday, September 4th.

I am calling your Board's attention to this fact because the 1917 Pamphlet of the Election Laws inadvertently omits referernces to the registration required to be held in the counties on September 4th.

Several of the Boards of Supervisors of Elections have made certain inquiries of my Department with respect to this registration, and I beg to submit my answer thereto, for your information.

1—Notice of the time and place of the registration to be held on September 4th must be given for the period and in the manner provided by Section 14 of Article 33 of Bagby's Code. While Section 17A does not specifically provide for such notice, yet section 14 applies to every registration held in the State.

2—Section 17A, providing for the September 4th registration, applies both to adults and to persons attaining their majority, as follows:

a. Adults who have not been registered prior to September 4th and who will be entitled to vote at the general election in November, are entitled to register on September 4th, and to vote at the primary election on September 11th, and also, of course, at the general election in November.

b. Persons who become twenty-one years of age between the last preceding general registration day and the registration of September 4th, may register on September 4th, and may vote at the primary election on September 11th, and also, of course, at the general election in November.

Such persons will not be entitled to vote at the primary election of September 11th unless they do register on September 4th, because Section 182, (which allows persons not twenty-one years of age to vote at a primary, provided they will become twenty-one before the general election succeeding the primary), only applies to persons "arriving at the age of twenty-one years after the close of the next preceding registration." In the present case, the next preceding registration to the primary election of September 11th will be the registration of September 4th, so that persons who become twenty-one before September 4th will not arrive at the age of twenty-one "after the close of the next preceding registration." Therefore, persons who become twenty-one before September 4th will not be entitled to vote at the primary election on September 11th unless they register on September 4th.

c. Persons who will become twenty-one years of age after the registration of September 4th and before the general election in November, may register on September 4th, and may vote at the primary election on September 11th, and also, of course, at the general election in November.

d. While persons who will become twenty one years of age after September 4th and before the primary election of September 11th, may, as just explained, register on September 4th, yet such persons are not required to register on September 4th in order to vote on September 11th. They may vote at the primary election of September 11th, without registering at all, in accordance with the provisions of Section 182. But in order that such persons may be entitled to vote at the general election in November, they must, of course, register at one of the October registrations.

3. After the close of the registration of September 4th, the registration books must be returned by the Boards of Registry to the Supervisors. They should not be retained until after the primary election is held on September 11th. Section 61 requires the Supervisors to deliver to the judges of election before the primary election of September 11th, sealed packages containing, among other things, the registers for such precinct. This provision could not, of course, be complied with unless the registration books are returned to the Supervisors, in order that they may be placed in the sealed packages.

Very truly yours,
ALBERT C. RITCHIE,
Attorney General.

The Secrets of the Hohenzollerns

STARTLING EXPOSURE OF INNER LIFE OF KAISER AND CROWN PRINCE AS TOLD BY COUNT ERNST VON HELTZENDORFF TO WILLIAM LEQUEUX

EDITORIAL NOTE. — William LeQueux, who here chronicles for his friend, Count Ernst von Heltzendorff, the latter's revelations of the inner life of the imperial German court, has long been recognized throughout Europe as the possessor of its innermost secrets.

The English "Who's Who" says of him: "He has intimate knowledge of the secret service of Continental countries and is considered by the government (of Great Britain) an authority on such matters." Another authority says: "Few people have been more closely associated with or know more of the astounding inner machinery of Germany than he."

LeQueux probably has more sources of secret information at his command than any contemporary in civil life, and for the last six years the British Government has made valuable use of his vast store of secret information through a specially organized department with which LeQueux works as a voluntary assistant.

Count von Heltzendorff became an intimate of LeQueux several years prior to the outbreak of the war; he has been living in retirement in France since August, 1914, and it was there that LeQueux received from the crown prince's late personal adjutant permission to make public these revelations of the inner life of the Hohenzollerns—that the democracies of the world might come to know the real, but heretofore hidden, personalities of the two dominant members of the autocracy they are now arrayed against.

Another Victim of the Crown Prince

LATE on the night of November 18, 1912, I was busily at work in the crown prince's room at the Marble palace at Potsdam.

I, as his imperial highness' personal adjutant, had been traveling all day with him from Cologne to Berlin. We had done a tour of military inspections in Westphalia, and, as usual, "Willie's" conduct had not been exactly exemplary.

On the night in question much had happened. The emperor had, a month before, returned from a visit to England, where he had been engaged by speeches and handshakes, public and private, blowing a narcotic dust in the nostrils of your dear but too confiding nation.

"Heltzendorff!" exclaimed the crown prince, as he suddenly entered the room where I was busy attending to a pile of papers. "Do get through all those letters and things. Burn them all if you can. What do they matter?"

"Oh, old Friesch! Tear it up! He is but an old fossil at best. And yet, Heltzendorff, he is designed to be of considerable use," he added. "His majesty told me tonight that after his visit to England he has conceived the idea to establish an official movement for the improvement of better relations between Britain and Germany. The dear British are always ready to receive such movements with open arms. At Carlton House terrace they strongly indorse the emperor's ideas, and he tells me that the movement should first arise in commercial and shipping circles. Herr Ballin will generate the idea in his offices in London and the various British ports, while his majesty has Von Gessler, the ex-ambassador at Washington, in view as the man to bring forth the suggestion publicly. Indeed, tonight from the Wilhelmstrasse there has been sent a message to his schloss on the Mosel commanding him to consult with his majesty. Von Bernstorff took his place at Washington a few months ago."

"But Von Gessler is an inveterate enemy of Britain," I exclaimed in surprise, still seated at my table.

"The world does not know that. The whole scheme is based upon Britain's ignorance of our intentions. We bring Von Gessler forward as the dear, good, Anglophile friend with his hand outstretched from the Wilhelmstrasse. Oh, Heltzendorff!" he laughed. "It is really intensely amusing, is it not?"

I was silent. I knew that the deeply laid plot against Great Britain was proceeding apace.

"Get through all that—tonight if you can, Heltzendorff," the crown princess leaves for Treseburg, in the Harz, tomorrow, and in the evening we go to Nice."

"To Nice!" I exclaimed.

"Yes," he said. "I have a friend there."

A friend there! I reflected. I could only suppose that the attraction in Nice was of the feminine gender.

"Then the lady is in Nice!" I remarked, for sometimes I was permitted, on account of my long service with the emperor, to speak familiarly.

"Lady, no!" he retorted. "It is a man. And I want to get to Nice at the earliest moment. So get through those infernal documents. Burn them all. They are better out of the way," he laughed.

The Trip to Nice.

Just before eleven o'clock on the following night we left the Marmor palace. His imperial highness traveled incognito as he always did when visiting France, assuming the name of Count von Grunau. With us was his personal valet, Schuler, the military secretary, Major Lentze, and Eckardt, the commissioner of secret police for his highness' personal protection.

After a restless night—for there were many stoppages—I spent next day with the crown prince in long and tiring discussions on military affairs. I endeavored to obtain from him some reason why we were proceeding to Nice, but to all my inquiries he was smilingly dumb.

Only a fortnight before he had had a quarrel with his wife.

"Cilli is a fool!" he had declared openly to me, after she had left the room in anger.

We had been busy arranging a program of official visits in eastern Germany, when suddenly the crown princess entered, pale with anger and demanded fiercely an explanation of a certain anonymous letter which she held in her hand.

"Kindly read that!" she said haughtily, "and explain what it means."

The crown prince grinned, that cold sinister expression overspreading his countenance, a look which is such a marked characteristic of his.

Then, almost snatching the letter from his young wife's fingers, he read it through, and with a sudden movement tore it up and flung it upon the carpet, saying:

"I refuse to discuss any unsigned letter! Really, if we were to notice every letter written by the common scum we should, indeed, have sufficient to do."

"I happen to have inquired, and I now know that those allegations are correct!" she cried. "This dark-haired singer-woman, Irene Speroni, has obtained great success on the variety stage in Italy. She is the star of the Sala Margherita in Rome."

"Well?" he asked in defiance. "And what of it, pray?"

"That letter you have destroyed tells me the truth. I received it a few days ago, and sent an agent to Italy in order to learn the truth. He has returned tonight. See!" And suddenly she produced a crumpled snapshot photograph of the crown prince in his polo-playing garb, and with him a smartly-dressed young woman, whose features were in the shadow.

"Yes," she cried bitterly. "You refuse, of course, to look upon this piece of evidence! I now know why you went to Wiesbaden. The woman was singing there, and you gave her a pair of emerald and diamond earrings which you purchased from Vollgold in Unter den Linden. See! Here is the bill for them!"

And again she produced a slip of paper.

The scene ended in the poor woman, in a frantic paroxysm of despair, tearing off the splendid necklet of diamonds at her throat—his present to her on their marriage—and casting it full into his face.

Then, realizing that the scene had become too tragic, I took her small hand, and, with a word of sympathy, led her out of the room and along the corridor.

As I left her she burst into a sudden torrent of tears; yet when I returned again to the crown prince I found his manner had entirely changed. He treated his wife's natural resentment and indignation as a huge joke, and it was then that his imperial highness declared to me:

"Cilli is a fool!"

* * * * * * *

"Listen, Heltzendorff," his highness exclaimed suddenly. "In Nice I may disappear for a day or two. I may be missing. But if I am, please don't raise a fuss about it. I'm incognito, and nobody will know. I may be absent for seven days. If I am not back by that time then you may make inquiry."

"But the Commissary of Police Eckardt! He will surely know?" I remarked in surprise.

"No. He won't know. I shall evade him as I've often done before," replied his imperial highness. "I tell you of my intentions so that you may curb the activities of our most estimable friend. Tell him not to worry, and he will be paid a thousand marks on the day Count von Grunau reappears."

I smiled, for I saw the influence of the eternal feminine.

"No, Heltzendorff. You are quite mistaken," he said, reading my thoughts. "There is no lady in this case. I am out here for secret purposes of my own. For that reason I take you into my confidence rather than that unnecessary inquiry should be made and some of those infernal journalists get hold of the fact that the Count von Grunau and the crown prince are one and the same person. I was a fool to take this salon. I ought to have traveled as an ordinary passenger, I know, but," he laughed, "this is really comfortable and, after all, what do we care what the world thinks—eh? Surely we can afford to laugh at it when all the honors of the game are already in our hands."

His words mystified me, but I became even more mystified by his actions a few days later.

I was in ignorance that a fortnight before Hermann Hardt, one of his highness' couriers, had left Potsdam and on arrival at Nice had rented for three months the fine Villa Lilas.

We soon settled there and on the evening of our arrival I accompanied the crown prince down into the town to the Jetee promenade.

We smoked together and chatted, as we often did when his imperial highness became bored. I was still mystified why we had come to the Riviera so early in the season.

Yet our coming had, no doubt, been privately signaled, because within half an hour of our arrival at the Villa Lilas a short, stout old Frenchman, with white, bristly hair—who I afterward found out was Monsieur Paul Bavouzet, the newly appointed prefect of the department of Alpes-Maritimes—called, to leave his card, upon the Count von Grunau.

The imperial incognito only means that the public are to be deluded. Officialdom never is. They know the ruse, and support it all the world over. His highness the crown prince was paying his annual visit to Nice, and the president had sent his compliments through his representative, the bristly-haired little prefect.

As I departed from the crown prince, who yawned and declared that he was tired, he said:

"Ah! Heltzendorff. How good it is to get a breath of soft air from the Mediterranean! We shall have a port on this pleasant sea one day—if we live as long—eh?"

That remark showed the trend of events. It showed how, hand in hand with the emperor, he was urging preparations for war—a war that had for its primary object the destruction of the powers which, when the volcano erupted, united as allies.

The Mysterious Lady.

After we had been at the Villa Lilas about ten days I was one afternoon seated outside the popular Cafe de l'Opera, in the Place Massena, when a lady, dressed in deep mourning and wearing the heavy veil in French style, passed along the pavement, glanced at me, and then, hesitating, she turned, and, coming back, advanced to the little table in the corner whereat I was sitting.

"May I be permitted to have a word with you, monsieur?" she asked in French, in a low, refined voice.

"Certainly," was my reply, and, I rose and drew a chair for her.

She glanced round quickly, as though to satisfy herself that she would not be overheard. I saw that she was about twenty-four, handsome, dark-haired, with well-cut features.

"I know, monsieur, that I am a complete stranger to you," she exclaimed with a smile, 'but to me you are quite familiar by sight. I have passed you many times in Berlin and in Potsdam, and I know that you are Count von Heltzendorff, personal adjutant to his highness the crown prince—or Count von Grunau, as he is known here in France."

"You know that!" I exclaimed.

She smiled mysteriously, replying:

"Yes, I—well, I happen to be a friend of his highness."

I held my breath. So this pretty young Frenchwoman was one of my imperial master's friends!

"The fact is," she went on, "I have traveled a considerable distance to see you. I said that I was one of the crown prince's friends. Please do not misunderstand me. I know that he has a good many friends, but I have never been introduced to him, and he does not know me. I am his friend because of a certain friendliness toward him."

"Really, madame, I don't quite understand," I said.

"Of course not," she answered, and then, glancing round, she added: "This place is a little too public. Cannot we go across the garden yonder?"

She told me that her name was Julie de Rouville, but she would give no account of where she lived.

"I have ventured to approach you, because I cannot approach the crown prince," she said presently. "You probably do not know the true reason of his visit here to Nice?"

"No," I said. "I admit that I do not. Why is he here?"

"It is a secret of his own. But, I am aware of the reason, and that is why I have sought you. Would it surprise you if I told you that in a certain quarter in France it will, in a few days, be known that the German emperor is establishing a movement for an entente between Germany and Britain, and that the whole affair is based upon a fraud? The emperor wants no entente, but only war with France and with Britain. The whole plot will be exposed in a few days!"

"From what source have you derived this knowledge?" I asked, looking at her in amazement.

But she again smiled mysteriously, and said:

"I merely tell you this in order to prove to you that I am in possession of certain facts known to but few people."

"You evidently are," I said. "But who intends to betray the truth to France?"

"I regret, count, that I cannot answer your question."

"If you are, as you say, the crown prince's friend, it would surely be a friendly act to let us know the truth, so that steps may be taken, perhaps, to avoid the secret of Germany's diplomacy from leaking out to her enemies."

"All I can tell you, count, is that the matter is one of the gravest importance."

"But will you not speak openly, and give us the actual facts?"

"I will—but to his imperial highness alone," was her answer.

"If his highness will honor me with an interview, then I will reveal all I know, and, further, will suggest a means of preventing the truth from leaking out."

"But you are French," I said.

"I have told you so," she laughed. "But probably his highness will refuse to see Julie de Rouville, therefore, I think it best if you show him this."

From her little gold chain-purse she produced a small, unmounted photograph of herself, and handed it to me.

"When he recognizes who wishes to see him he will understand," she said, in a quiet, refined voice. "A letter addressed to Julie de Rouville at the Post Restante at Marseilles will quickly find me. I do not wish the letter to be sent to me here. From Marseilles I shall duly receive it."

I was silent for a few moments.

"I confess," I exclaimed at last. "I confess I do not exactly see the necessity for an interview with his highness, when whatever you tell me—as his personal adjutant—will be regarded as strictly in confidence."

"I have already said, Count von Heltzendorff, that I am his highness' friend, and wish to approach him with motives of friendship."

"You wish for no payment for this information, eh?" I asked suspiciously, half believing that she might be a secret agent of France.

"Payment—of course not!" she answered, half indignantly. "Show that photograph to the crown prince, and tell him that I apply for an interview."

Then, rather abruptly, she rose and walked away, leaving me with her photograph in my hand.

The crown prince was out motoring, and did not get back to the villa until after seven o'clock.

As soon as I heard of his return I went to his room and recounted my strange adventure with the dark-haired young woman in black. He became keenly interested, and the more so when I told him of her secret knowledge of the kaiser's intended establishment of a bogus entente with Great Britain.

"She wishes to see you," I said. "And she told me to give you her photograph."

I handed it to him.

At sight of it his face instantly changed. He held his breath and then examined the photograph beneath the light.

Next second, however, he had recovered his self-possession and said:

"Yes, of course, I know her. She wants me to write to Julie de Rouville at the Post Restante at Marseilles, eh? H'm—I'll think it over."

Late in the afternoon, two days later, his highness, who had been walking alone, returned to the villa with a stranger, a tall, rather thin, fair-haired man, undoubtedly a German, and the pair were closeted together, holding counsel evidently for a considerable time. Where his highness met him I knew not, but when later on I entered the room I saw that the pair were on quite friendly terms.

His highness addressed him as Herr Schafer, and when he had left he told me that he was from the Wilhelmstrasse and had been attached to the embassy at Washington, and afterwards in London, "for affairs of the press."

Whatever was in progress was a strict secret between the pair. The more I saw of Hans Schafer the more I disliked him. He had cruel eyes and I could see that he was a very clever and cunning person.

For a full fortnight the crown prince and the man Schafer were almost inseparable. Was it for the purpose of meeting Schafer that he had gone to Nice? The man had been back from London about two months and had, I learnt, been lately living in Paris.

One evening while strolling along the tree-lined Promenade des Anglais I suddenly encountered Julie de Rouville, dressed in mourning, a quiet, pathetic figure, just as we had last met.

I instantly recollected that since the evening when I had given her photograph to the crown prince he had never mentioned her.

"Ah, count!" she cried. "This is indeed, a welcome meeting! I have been looking out for you for the past two days."

"I've been staying over at Cannes," was my reply. "Well?"

"I have to thank you for giving my photograph and message to his highness," she said.

"I trust that the crown prince has written you—eh?"

"Well, no—" was her rather vague reply.

"Then how are you aware that I gave your message?"

She shook her head and smiled.

"I had my own means of discovery. By certain signs I knew you had carried out your promise," she said. "But as I have heard nothing, I wish you to deliver another message—a very urgent one. Tell him I must see him, for I dread daily lest the truth of the kaiser's real intentions be known at the Quai d'Orsay."

"Certainly," was my reply. "I will deliver your message this evening."

"Tell him that my sole desire is to act in the interests of the emperor and himself," she urged.

"But, forgive me," I said, "I cannot see why you should interest yourself in the crown prince if he declines to communicate with you."

"I have my reasons, Count von Heltzendorff," was her rather haughty reply. "Please tell him that the matter will not brook further delay."

I had seen in the London newspapers during the past week how eagerly the English journalists, with the dust cast into their eyes, were blindly advocating that the British public should welcome the great German national movement, headed by Baron von Gessler, supported by Ballin, Delbruck and Von Wedel, with the hearty co-operation of the emperor and the imperial chancellor—the movement to establish better relations with Great Britain.

I knew that the secret should at all hazards be kept, and that night I told the crown prince of my second meeting with the pretty woman in black and her urgent request.

He laughed, but made no remark. Yet I knew by his tone that he was not so easy in his mind as he desired me to believe.

It also seemed strange why, if the young Frenchwoman was so desirous of meeting him, she did not call at the villa.

About a week later it suddenly occurred to me to endeavor to discover the real identity of the lady in black, but as I was not certain whether she actually lived in Nice it was rather difficult. Nevertheless, by invoking the aid of my friend Belabre, inspector of the Surete of Nice, and after waiting a few days I made an astounding discovery, namely, that the lady who called herself De Rouville was an Italian cafe concert singer named Irene Speroni—the woman who had aroused the jealousy of the crown princess! And she knew that important state secret of Germany!

The situation was a most serious one. I felt it my duty to mention my discovery to his highness, when, to my surprise, he was not in the least angry. He merely said:

"It is true, Heltzendorff—true what the crown princess declared—that I went to Wiesbaden and that I gave the woman a pair of emerald earrings which I ordered from old Vollgold. But there was no reason for jealousy. I saw the woman and gave her the present in the hope of closing her lips."

In a moment I understood. The pretty variety artiste was endeavoring to levy blackmail. But how could she, in her position, have learned the secret of the emperor's intentions?

She was, I found, living as Signorina Speroni, with her maid, at the Hotel Bristol over at Beaulieu, just across the blue bay of Villefranche, and as the days went on I realized the imminent danger of exposure, and wondered if the kaiser knew of it.

I made a remark to that effect to his highness one morning, whereupon he replied:

"Don't disturb yourself, my dear Heltzendorff! I have not overlooked the matter, for it is one that closely concerns both the emperor and myself. The woman obtained the secret by opening the dispatch box of one who believed her to be his friend, and then she attempted to use her knowledge in order to drag me into her net. But I do not think I am very likely to be caught—eh?"

At that moment Herr Schafer entered the room, therefore further discussion was out of the question.

From inquiries I made later on I found that the concert singer had suddenly left the hotel, therefore I went over to Beaulieu and had an instructive chat with the hall porter, a German, of course. From him I learned that the signorina had been staying there ever since the date when we had arrived at Nice and, further, that two gentlemen had been frequently in the habit of calling upon her. One was a smart young Frenchman who came in a motor car and the other was a German. From the description of the latter I at once came to the conclusion that it was none other than Herr Schafer.

"The one gentleman did not know of the other's visits," said the bearded porter, with a laugh. "The signorina always impressed silence upon me, because she thought one would be jealous of the other. The German gentleman seemed very deeply in love with her, and she called him Hans. He accompanied her when she left here for San Remo."

I reported this to his highness, but he made no remark. A week later some fishermen found upon the brown rocks near Capo Verde, beyond San Remo, the body of a woman, fully dressed, afterwards identified as that of Irene Speroni, the singer so popular in Rome.

It was proved that on the previous night she had been seen by two peasants walking along the sea road near San Lorenzo, accompanied by a tall, thin man, who seemed greatly excited, and was talking in German. It was believed by the Italian police that the unknown German, in a fit of jealousy, threw her into the sea.

From facts I gathered some months later I realized that the whole plot had been most cunningly conceived. Schafer, after his return from America, had met the woman Speroni, who was performing in London, and she had, unknown to him, opened his dispatch box and from some secret correspondence had learned the real truth regarding the proposed entente which the emperor contemplated.

Schafer, alarmed at the woman's knowledge, and yet fascinated by her charms, had gone to the crown prince, and he, in turn, had seen the woman in Wiesbaden. Finding her so dangerous to the emperor's plans he first introduced her to a young French marquis, de Vienne by name, who pestered her with his attentions, and followed her to Beaulieu. Having so far succeeded, the crown prince went to Nice and played upon Schafer's love for the woman, pointing out that she was playing a double game and urging him to watch.

He did so and discovered the truth. Then there occurred the tragedy of jealousy, exactly as the police believed.

Herr Schafer had, however, escaped to Germany, and the police of San Remo are still in ignorance of his identity.

Veneux Nadon,
par Moret-sur-Loing,
Seine-et-Marne,
February 10th, 1917.

My dear LeQueux:

I have just finished reading the proofs of your articles describing my life as an official at the imperial court at Potsdam, and the two or three small errors you made I have duly corrected.

The gross scandals and wily intrigues which I have related to you were many of them known to yourself, for, as the intimate friend of Luisa, the ex-crown princess of Saxony, you were, before the war, closely associated with many of those at court whose names appear in these articles.

The revelations which I have made, and which you have recorded here, are but a tithe of the disclosures which I could make, and if the world desires more, I shall be pleased to furnish you with other and even more startling details, which you may also put into print.

My service as personal adjutant to the German crown prince is, happily, at an end, and now, with the treachery of Germany against civilization glaringly revealed, I feel, in my retirement, no compunction in exposing all I know concerning the secrets of the kaiser and his son.

With most cordial greetings from
Your sincere friend,
(Signed) ERNST VON HELTZENDORFF.

A colored man, working near the outskirts of the city, went to a nearby grocery at the noon hour and bought 5 cents worth of crackers for his lunch. As he started to leave the store he noticed some neat looking boxes that contained samples of axle grease. "Say, mister," he called to the grocer, "what's these little boxes of cheese worth?" "Oh," says the grocer, "those are just advertising samples. Help yourself to one if you like." The next day he appeared at the store again and was asked by the groceryman how he liked his lunch of yesterday. Scratching his head dubiously he said: "Well, mister, your crackers was n-all right, but, sa-a-ay, boss, that cheese was sure 'ransom.'" — Indianapolis News.

MARRIED CONSCRIPTS.

The attitude toward conscription is changing rapidly. The observer can see signs of this change among his acquaintances. There is less discussion of exemption and grounds for exemption than a few weeks ago and more talk of chances for being accepted. If this new feeling toward national service grows steadily at its present rate local boards will have less and less to do.

Nowhere is the change in sentiment more apparent than among married men of draft age. Instead of weighing their chances of being excused, with few exceptions they are laying plans, many far in advance, for the separate maintenance of their families so they can waive claim to exemption and go to France. In making such plans these men are not in opposition to their wives, but in hearty accord with them. The young women want their husbands to serve and are co-operating to mane the necessary arrangements.

How refreshing and stimulating to love of country is this fast developing situation after the depressing reports of opposition that followed the initiation of the selective service law; and how much better for America that its manhood and womanhood is seizing its chance to serve before the opportunity slips by! One may talk as he pleases of the advantages of the volunteer system but day by day we are learning the superior ones of conscription. And there is as much modest heroism possible under the compulsion law as in the old days of volunteers, because now a man may overcome difficulties making unimpeachable reasons for remaining behind and say, "Here am I." The woman's sacrifice is the greater because by exerting her will she could detain him.

Watch for the look of pride and gladness on the face of the next man who tells you he is accepted.

IN A CERTAIN CONTINGENCY.

In former Ambassador Gerard's book "My Four Years in Germany," now being printed in installments in the Philadelphia Ledger, the following interesting passage occurs:

"The Germans believed that President Wilson had been elected with a mandate to keep out of war at any cost, and that America could be insulted, flouted and humiliated with impunity.

It is water under the bridge to discuss what might have been the course of affairs in the great war had Mr. Hughes not made his California trip and thereby started a political quarrel that gave the State to Wilson, assuring his election. Advocates of Mr. Hughes believed that the surest way to keep this country out of war was to make it known, in unmistakable tones, to the German people and the German Government that we would enter the war if there was continued disregard of our rights. They argued that the election of Mr. Hughes would effect this purpose. Mr. Gerard seems to have been of the same opinion.

On the other hand, a great body of those who supported Mr. Hughes thought that the United States had reason to enter the war; that it should enter and that unless it did so the Allies would be defeated, bringing the United States face to face with the peril President Wilson now recognizes. On this ground they can accept the election and the results following it with equanimity. One fact that they cannot overlook is that, had war followed Mr. Hughes' election, they would have been hearing yet that with Wilson in the White House we would have kept out of the conflict. At least the country was spared a possible division of sentiment compared with which that that has been witnessed would have been as a summer zephyr to a cyclone.

ALL BATTLE FRONTS BECOME ACTIVE

The one hundred and sixty-first week of the war opened yesterday with unusual activity on numerous battle fronts. The most important development was the offensive taken by Italy. Some weeks ago it was unofficially reported that Italy had approximately a million trained men, but no place to use them effectively. This was probably an exaggeration, and while no explanation was given for the relative inactivity of Italian troops while every day witnessed hard fighting by the French and English on the western front, it is probable that lack of equipment or transportation accounted for it. Now, however, Rome reports that the Italians have started a great drive on three fronts and captured 7,500 prisoners the first day. Field Marshall Haig came forward with his daily report of gains in the Ypres sector, and Paris announced a fresh demonstration in force against the Germans who persist in their efforts to take Verdun. The Berlin statement contained the interesting news that French troops had occupied Talou ridge "without fighting," and that the Prussians were resisting attempts to drive them back toward the Trotus valley. Meanwhile unprecedented activity among the air forces on all fronts was resumed.

One cannot suppress the feeling that the efforts now being put forth are connected with the latest peace proposol. Presumably the Allies are now exchanging views on the character of the answer that is to be made to the Pope's invitation. If public sentiment as expressed through the press may be accepted as an invitation, the basis of the proposed negotiations will be rejected by all the Entente Allies and the United States. It will strengthen the force of the rejection if developments on the several battle fronts point to the probability that the Central Powers will soon reach the stage where they must sue for peace on the broad grounds already advanced by the Allies of reparation and security. Not one of the billigerants looks forward with equanimity toward the prospect of spending another winter in the trenches, but even Germany must admit that her foe will be better equipped for this ordeal than ever before.

SUNDAY RALLY AT CRELLIN

"Fellowship Day" Was a Great Success.

One of the most successful religious meetings ever held in the western part of the county was that of last Sabbath at Crellin under the auspices of the Crellin, Underwood and Hutton churches, led by the Rev. G. S. Hanleiter.

The people began to arrive at the grove by nine-thirty and by 10:30 o'clock there were one thousand people on the grounds. The train from Shafer, W. Va., brought a great delegation.

Bishop W. M. Weekley, D. D., of Parkersburg, W. Va., preached a masterly sermon on the "Return of Jesus Christ to the Earth." The great audience sat spellbound. At the close of the discourse Rev. Hanleiter invited the audience to come forward and shake hands with the Bishop, the M. E. pastor and each other.

The combined choirs sang "I want to see Jesus, Don't you?" The great throng joined in the song as they shook hands and many shouts of rejoicing were heard.

The afternoon was spent in singing by the Crellin and Hutton choirs and Loch Lynn, Hutton and Crellin quartets. The Crellin choir is composed of sopranos, Mrs. Luther Knotts, Mrs. C. R. Smith, Mrs. Ernest Ashby; altos, Mrs. Frank Blake, Mrs. G. J. Yutzy, Mrs. Geo. Edwards; tenors, Jessee Ashby, D. T. Ashby, J. C. Forman; bassos, A. Johnson, L. Knotts, C. R. Smith, Ernest Ashby. Hutton choir, E. C. Cuppett, leader; sopranos, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Felton, Mrs. Archie Connell, Mrs. Fred Paulie, Miss Mona Steward; altos, Mrs. G. W. Morris, Mrs. Homer Nordeck, Mrs. E. Ashby; tenors, Homer Nordeck, G. W. Morris, Chester Hardesty, Otis Cuppett; bassos, W. H. Gard, Robert and Shank Brydon Hardesty, Walter Harvey, Fred Paulie, Clem Hardesty.

Prof. E. M. Spedden, of Jenningston, W. Va., and Prof. Groves, of Albright, were present and took part.

Mrs. Joseph Tritchler, of Crellin, a cultured musician, was the organist and general director. The singing was exceptionally good. The Crellin Sunday school sang, among the "hits" of the day was "A Rainbow on The Cloud" by the children and "Canning the Kaiser" by the vast congregation and the salute to "Old Glory."

The day will be remembered as a day of "Good Fellowship."

YOUNG GIRL VICTIM OF SHOTGUN

Miss Lena Friend Was Horribly Wounded Sunday Evening.

Miss Lena Friend, aged eighteen years, daughter of Homer Friend, of near Friendsville, who is a farmer and former school teacher of Garrett county, and John Sterling, a son of the late William Sterling, of Elder Hill also near Friendsville, were the victims of a murderous assault on Sunday night at the home of Miss Friend when some person, unknown to them or to the authorities of the county, deliberately fired a shot gun through the window, the load of number 6 shot striking both the young lady and young man and wounding the former to such an extent that she may yet succumb as a result of the terrible injuries inflicted.

Miss Friend is at the Western Maryland Hospital, Cumberland, to which point she was taken Monday morning from Oakland following her arrival here, where her physician expected to place her in the Home Sanatorium, but owing to the crowded condition of the local hospital, a room could not be had. Miss Friend's injuries are such as to be almost indiscribable. The right side of her lower jaw is almost entirely shot away, but one tooth remaining in her mouth; a portion of her tongue is also shot away, while numerous wounds are in evidence in both hands. Young Sterling receiving more than fifty shot in his right arm and shoulder. He was attended by Drs. Mason and Nedrow and was not brought to Oakland.

Miss Friend and Mr. Sterling are believed to have been the victims of a jealous lover of the girl, who is attractive and very intelligent. She was in Oakland on Friday prior to the shotting where she took an examination for a teachers' certificate for work this winter.

According to the best information Miss Friend attended church Sunday evening which is located about one-half mile from her home, and was met at the church by Mr. Sterling, who accompanied her home. After reaching home the young people went into the parlor and sat on the sofa. While in conversation the shadow of a man was noticed near the window looking into the parlor but before either could make an investigation, the man discharged a shotgun, the shot taking effect on the right side of the girl's face, tearing away her lower jaw. Her right hand was badly torn by the discharge and her nose was peppered with shot. Mr. Sterling, who was seated by her side, received a portion of the shot in the right shoulder and neck.

The girl was hurried to Oakland by Dr. Mason and Dr. Nedrow and the wounds dressed by Drs. N. I. Broadwater and H. W. McComas.

AN ARREST IN THE CASE

Following an investigation made at Friendsville in connection with the shooting of Miss Friend by Sheriff Albert Ashby and State's Attorney Jones, Hubert Lish, aged twenty-four years, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Lish, of near Friendsville, was placed under arrest Monday evening and was brought to Oakland that night where he is confined in the county jail preliminary to a hearing to be given him in a day or two.

Lish is a cousin of Miss Friend and has admitted that he was in love with the young lady but that she resented his advances. He denies that he had anything to do with the shooting. The authorities are in possession of information to the effect that at the time of the commission of the crime Lish was absent from his home, which is located about fifty yards from that of the home of Miss Friend, and that he returned to the house within a few minutes after the shooting took place.

Lish shows evidence of being weak minded. He has been considered by those who have known him that he is not entirely responsible for his acts. His parents are highly esteemed people. Mrs. Lish is a sister of Mr. Homer Friend, the father of the young lady who was shot.

Double Murder at Albright.

John Stanton was instantly killed and his brother, Grover Stanton, received a fatal wound at Albright, Preston county, W. Va., Friday, after an altercation with Peter Fizer, a resident of the same community. The two men were shot to death by Fizer in the street near the end of the bridge across the Cheat river. A revolver was used. Fizer is in jail in Kingwood. According to information in the hands of the official, Fizer had represented himself to be a deputy game warden and the trouble started over his approaching Stanton brothers on a matter of the violation of the game laws. The Stanton brothers were miners and Fizer had been a laborer engaged in general work. Both the dead men leave families. A dog belonging to one of the men, which Fizer sought to shoot, is also said to have figured in the tragedy.

Largest Potato Crop ever Produced in the United States.

The largest potato crop ever produced in this country is the promise of the monthly crop report just issued. Leon M. Estabrook, Chief of the Bureau of crop Estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture, stated this morning that the average production for the previous five years (1911-1915) was 363,000,000 bushels, which represents a fair crop. This year the indications are that there will be a crop of 467,000,000 bushels, which is 100,000,000 above the average.

This is equal to one bushel extra for every man, woman and child in the country.

In order to avoid waste, officials of the Department of Agriculture suggest two ways of taking care of this large increase:

First, all housewives are urged to use potatoes as far as possible as a substitute for breadstuffs.

Second, to preserve the potatoes for winter use by home storage.

These measures, it is stated, will not only use the potatoes to advantage, but will save wheat.

Married.

POPE—MILLER—Harry Pope, who resides on the National pike, seven miles west of Frostburg, and Miss Florence Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Miller, were married in the parlor of the Gladstone Hotel Saturday evening by the Rev. B. T. Waltz of the Church of the Brethren, of Salisbury, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wagner were the attendants. The bride wore a becoming costume and carried a bouquet of rosebuds. A wedding dinner followed at the Gladstone. Mr. and Mrs. Pope departed for Atlantic City.

By order of the President, issued on Tuesday, prices of coal at the mines in Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania were fixed as follows; For slack, $1.75 per ton; run-on-mine, $2.00; lump, $2.25 per ton of 2000 pounds. Many small operators have declared that with these prices in effect they will be compelled to close their mines as the cost of production will allow no profit and in many cases will cause a distinct loss.

Many Garrett countians were in Oakland Monday and Tuesday from different sections of the county and upon various business missions, many of them being candidates to be voted for at the primary election who came here to file their nomination papers. Amongst those in the city Monday were Messrs. Henry P. Miller, of Grantsville, candidate for County Commissioner; George D. Browning of No. 2, who is a candidate for the same office; Capt. James A. Hayden of the Park, a candidate for the House of Delegates; F. P. Arnold, of the same town and with the same political ambition, and numerous others, including State Senator Harvey J. Speicher, who also filed nomination papers for the office of Senator.

With the array of candidates in the field for political honors it should prove no hard task on the part of the intelligent electorate of Garrett county to choose a winning ticket for the campaign in November. In addition to the candidates to be selected at the primary election next month, the voters of the county must elect at this time a State Central Committee for each of the parties. In the case of the Republicans four must be chosen, while the Democrats will elect three of the six candidates who have filed their applications to have their names placed upon the official ballots. As in past years each party will have separate ballots. The Republican ballots will be printed on pink paper and the Democratic ballots on white paper.

HOW TO CONQUER THE CRAMP

A cramp is merely a contraction of the muscles caused by the penetration of the cold. Obviously, it could not of itself cause drowning. Its effect, according to Popular Science Monthly, is to cause a panic which throws the swimmer off his guard, causing him to let the air out of his lungs and thus allow the air passages to become filled with water. The safeguard against such a panic is absolute confidence in the floating power of the body and a demonstrable knowledge of the proper way to quickly fill the lungs to utmost capacity with air.

The moment a cramp is felt, the swimmer should turn on his back and begin to gulp the air, making no effort to keep himself from sinking. As he sinks he slowly exhales under water, through the mouth, with the lips puckered as for whistling. If it is a stomach cramp the knees will be drawn up against the abdomen, but the swimmer should force them out, pushing on them with both hands and using all his strength until they are fully extended. This will no doubt cause great pain for a few seconds, but as soon as the legs are straightened out the cramp will vanish, and the body, buoyed up by the air in the lungs, will shoot up to the surface. There still inhaling in great gulps and exhaling through puckered lips, the swimmer may float until he regains his strength or is picked up.

In case of cramp in the leg or arm the same system of breathing is followed and the affected part is straightened out by sheer strength.

Try This on Chiggers.

Collodion is said to give relief from the irritation caused by the bites of chiggers. Collodion is a solution of gun cotton in alcohol and ether. When it is applied to the skin, the alcohol and ether evaporate, leaving a colorless film which adheres to the skin. An application of collodion is excellent treatment for hang nails. The bottle should be kept tightly corked.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 26.

THE CAPTIVITY OF JUDAH.

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 25:1-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked.—Ezekiel 33:11.

Many years after the kingdom of Israel was taken captive by the Assyrians, Judah was carried away to Babylon. Judah's captivity was in three stages, covering about twenty years. The first deportation was while Jehoiakim was king. Daniel and his friends went into captivity at this time (Dan. 1:1-6). The seventy years captivity dates from this time. The second deportation was while Jehoiakim reigned. Most likely Ezekiel was carried away with this second company (Ezekiel 1:1-2). The third deportation, some twelve years after the second, is the one described in our lesson. At this time the greater part of the nation was removed to Babylon. Only the poor and unimportant were left. Jerusalem itself was destroyed at this time.

I. Jerusalem Besieged (vv. 1-3). Zedekiah owed his kingship to the king of Babylon (chapter 24:17), who appointed him to the throne after the removal of Jehoiakim. His name was changed from Mattaniah to Zedekiah. He was not a good man (24:19). Though having his position by the will of the king of Babylon, he rebelled against that king. He thought that by the aid of the surrounding nations, especially Egypt, he could throw off the yoke of Babylon. Jeremiah counseled submission, but the king refused. Nebuchadnezzar came in person with all his host and laid siege to Jerusalem, even building forts against it (v. 1). This siege lasted for about a year and a half. For a while during that period the Chaldean army withdrew because of the appearance of Pharaoh's army (Jer. 37:5). Shut off from help from without, the Jews soon were famishing for want of bread. The horrors of this famine were awful. For a description of it one should read the book of Lamentations. Mothers ate their own children (Lam. 4:10). The richest, even ladies in silken robes, wandered about searching for scraps in the dung heaps (Lam. 4:5-10). Their tongues clave to the roofs of their mouths, and their skins were dried up. Added to these horrors were murderous fights between parties among the Jews. Some wanted to surrender; others insisted upon holding out.

II. Zedekiah's Flight (vv. 4-7). At length the city was broken up, and the king and his warriors fled by night. His thought was to escape to the country beyond the Jordan. The Chaldean army overtook him, scattered his army, and carried Zedekiah to Riblah, where Nebuchadnezzar had his headquarters. Here judgment was passed upon him. In his trial it was shown that his solemn oath of allegiance to the Chaldeans had been broken, thus showing himself a traitor (II Chron. 36:13). As a punishment for his treachery his own sons were slain before him, his eyes put out (v. 7), and he himself carried to Babylon, where he remained a prisoner till his death (Jer. 52:11). In this we have a marvelous fulfillment of prophecy (Ezekiel 12:3), which says that Zedekiah shall be taken to Babylon and die there and yet not see the city. He could not see it because his eyes were out. Let us learn from this that that which God says will surely come to pass, even though we cannot explain its details.

III. The Destruction of the City (vv. 8-10). Not only were the people taken captive, but the city itself was subjected to the utmost rigors of war. They plundered the house of the Lord, the palace and the houses of the rich, and then consigned them to the flames (v. 9). They even broke down the walls of Jerusalem (v. 10) and massacred many of the people (Lam. 2:3, 4).

IV. Disposition of the Inhabitants and the Contents of the Temple (vv. 11-21). 1. The inhabitants (vv. 11, 12). They were divided into two classes, those who had deserted to the Babylonians during the siege and those who were found inside of the city at the time it was taken. Many doubtless deserted to the Babylonians during this siege, as even Jeremiah was arrested on this charge (Jer. 38:13). The poor of the land were left to be vine dressers and husbandmen. The wealthy and influential were taken away, as they would be of value to the conquering nation; besides they would be a menace if left behind. The poor were left because pauper captives would be a burden.

Besides it was very undesirable for the land to lie in waste, as then they could not exact tribute from it. To that end encouragement was given by the Babylonians as "vineyards and fields" were given to the poor.

2. The contents of the temple (vv. 13-21). From the temple which had been twice plundered before (II Chron. 36:7, 10), such of gold, silver and bronze vessels as still remained were taken, even the great pillars of the molten sea. The captives and the treasure were delivered to Nebuchadnezzar at Roblah, where more than threescore of men were killed (vv. 19-21).

HE HIT BULL'S EYE THEN

Governor Cox of Ohio Explains Why His Marksmanship Improved Suddenly on Rifle Range.

James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, told this story when he visited Fort Benjamin Harrison, says the Indianapolis News:

"I was over at the fort this afternoon, and out at the rifle range Major Darrow asked me if I wouldn't like to try shooting. The men then were shooting from the 600-yard range. I said 'yes,' so Major Darrow borrowed a rifle for me from one of the men and another for himself, and we lay down across the sand bags and began pepping away."

"After each shot that either of us made the man down in the pit waved the red flag that meant we had missed the target altogether.

"Finally, after about a half dozen shots apiece, the major said: 'Young man, telephone down to that man in the pit that Major Darrow is shooting,' and so the young man did, and then the major shot again, and the pit man waved the emblem that signified the major had hit the bull's-eye.

"Then I said to myself, 'um hum,' and so I turned to the man on my right and I said, 'Young man, telephone down to the pit man that the governor of Ohio is shooting, and then the next time I hit the bull's eye, too.'"

Hated to Play With Him.

At the club Thompson and Taylor were discussing the peculiarities of certain of the card players when Thompson said:

"There are two men here—Parker and Perkins—I surely hate to play with.

"Oh," said Taylor, "I know Parker's always a hard loser, but what's wrong with Perkins?"

"He," said Thompson, "is always an easy winner."—Puck.

She Knew What to Take.

Five-year-old Mary, who is always anxious to be in everything that goes on, lives in a small town where the long-suffering minister still endures donation parties, to make up his back salary. Just before the last one she begged eagerly:

"Can't I take something, too, muvver?"

"No; if your father and I take something, that will be plenty."

But the child could not bear to give up the idea, so she ransacked the whole house for something suitable. Finally she appeared before her mother with a worn and faded dress of her own.

"Please, muvver, can't I take this? See, it's not a speck of good for anything," she urged.—Christian Herald.

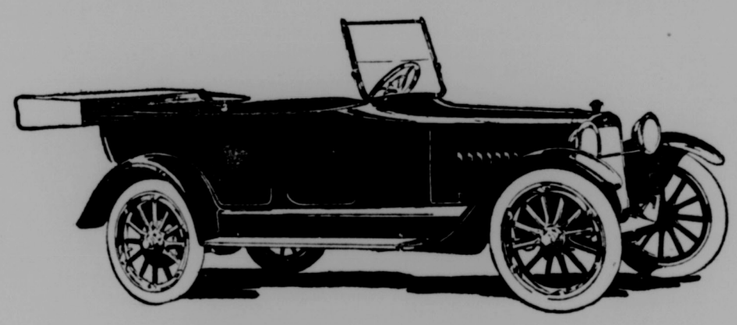
SAXON "SIX"

A BIG TOURING CAR FOR FIVE PEOPLE



25.9 Miles Per Gal. of Gas

234 stock model Saxon "Sixes" travel 70,200 miles July 18 and set grand average of 25.9 miles per gal. of gas

A grand average of 25.9 miles per gallon of gasoline was registered for the 70,200 miles of travel.

Consider that this run took place in 234 different parts of the country, under 234 different sets of conditions, over 234 different kinds of roads.

Consider that these 234 cars were stock model Saxon "Sixes", not "tuned up" special cars, not cars with "doped" gasoline.

That proves that this 25.9 miles per gallon of gasoline is the ordinary, the average performance of 234 Saxon "Sixes" taken right out of stock.

And it proves as nothing else would prove, the gasoline economy your Saxon "Six" will give you. No other car in its class can match this record.

There is the proof that Saxon "Six" is your kind of a car. Price f. o. b. Detroit, $935.

"Yes, certainly."

"Is one side rather worn?"

"Just so."

"Here you are, then," said the finder and handed him a trousers button."

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Heavenly Recognition.

I closed my previous article by saying the Jews believed in the future recognition of their friends.

The Patriarchs spoke of being gathered to their father's. Of Abraham it was said he was gathered unto his people, so also was it said of Isaac. Jacob's dying hour was comforted by the thought that he was going to mingle with his sainted ancestors and would participate with them in the joys of the spirit world.

The Jews spoke of life as being a pilgrimage and when they had reached the end of that, or death, they would be received into the company of their ancestors who had preceded them. Evidently David found solace in the doctrine when bereaved of his son, for he said, I shall go to him. He expected to meet his child again. While there is a ray of hope that he might recover he used every possible means to attain that end, but so soon as he died, the father, with implicit confidence, plants himself on this doctrine.

How often has the Christians heart found comfort, when called to give up loved ones, in the confident expectation of meeting again. At the hour, when if ever, all false hopes and errors should be banished, the Christian feels that the social life is not destroyed, but that these ties of friendship are only dropped at death to be taken up in eternity, and woven into a more beautiful and everlasting structure.

A very strong argument in favor of this doctrine is found in the fact that the lost know each other in the place of doom. The story of the rich man and Lazarus is apropos. It represents the same truth which he expresses in Lu. 13:28 "There shall be weaping and gnashing of teeth when you see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and the Prophets in the kingdom and you yourself thrust out."

If the constitution of our nature is such, that the lost recognize each other then surely the redeemed may. It will be to them an element of woe as it will be to the redeemed an element of joy.

To those who occupy the position of parents, this fact will add to your woe inasmuch as you are not only making shipwreck of your own souls by a life of sin or carelessness about religion, but whose example is leading your children along with you in the broad road to ruin.

When hell, with its awful realities, is begun how will one feel to meet and know those of his own household weaving a canopy of woe around you and hear them say, O father or mother' why did you not tell us of this in time, that we might not have come to this place of torment. But with what joy will you meet in glory, and how happy you shall be, when together you stand before the throne of God and the Lamb.

In that bold but beautiful figure of Isa. 14, where the unseen world is represented as disturbed at the coming of the fallen tyrant who is met by astonished kings, this truth is hinted at. The wicked retained their powers of recognition. We have satisfactory evidence of the truth of this doctrine in 1 Thess. 2:19. Paul here uses language that implies this, and what he expected may be expected by all real Christians in relation to their pious friends.

He expected a reward for his labors as did all the early Christian teachers, and he did not deny that reward consisted in the conversion, salvation and glory of those he had been instrumental in saving. In view of this he says, "ye are our crown of rejoicing." Then he exhorts his Philippian friends 2:15, to be blameless and sincere the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation (race) among whom shine ye as lights in the world, that ye may rejoice in the day of Christ. John urges the elect lady and her children to perserve in Christian love, that he might receive a full reward. He anticipated a reward, and it cannot be separated from the recognization of those who were the fruits of his ministry. But one may say there is no dogimatic statement in scripture that this is true.

We admit this, but as all is truly implied, this evidence is conclusive testimony in favor of the doctrine. The very employments of heaven, require a knowledge of each other and therefore recognition. The mansions which he has prepared suggests the home life of heaven. The redeemed are spoken of as the family of God in heaven, He is our father and Christ is our elder brother.

When Jesus referred to the joys of heaven, He said, many shall come from the east and from the west and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. He recognizes the doctrine of recognition. Here He represents the Patriarchs and saints as feasting together and enjoying social intercourse. If then we may become acquainted with these, why may we not meet and know our friends and relatives. This family relationship suggests knowledge and communion of its members.

They all sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Can a congregation worship day after day and all its members remain ignorant of each other?

It imphes communion, and there can be no true communion without mutual love and knowledge can we suppose that the sanctified Christian friendships of life will be sundered and only new ones formed? Is it reasonable to suppose that God will act so contrary to our natures that he will not permit us to meet, or if he should, that there should be no recognition or special love? It is a joy to us now to meet dear friends after a temporary separation and surely it will be one of the elements of joy to the ransomed soul to be reunited after a temporary separation. Here we will rest for the present.

There was no other damage. The patient is resting quietly and no serious results are feared.

The class, which numbers some of the prettiest little girls in the village had complete charge of the affair and worked unceasingly to make it a success, and several older members of the family appeared like good fairies behind the scenes during the rush and helped out. Twenty-four dollars was taken in, at least $13 of which is clear profit and will be sent to the Loysville Orphans' Home to help buy uniforms for the children. Two children had a narrow escape from death last Friday, the little fellows being Masters Cobert and Walter Younkin, cousins, living opposite each other near the east end of town. Robert attempted to cross the street just as a car coming eastward was almost upon him, but the owner seeing the child's danger, with rare presence of mind turned his car, running it directly against a telegraph pole shattering the windshield into pieces. Almost directly in line of the car as it turned sat little Walter Younkin who was slightly grazed on the face and thrown down, but otherwise unhurt. The wife of the man driving the car had her face badly cut and was taken into a neighboring house and a physician was summoned to attend her injuries. The tourists were from Pittsburgh on their way home. Persons who witnessed the accident say that only the drivers presence of mind saved the little follow's life, as, in his preoccupation, he evidently did not see the approaching car. A number of accidents have occurred about here this summer, usually upon the Sabbath when there are so many cars abroad.

Safety Clothes.

The insurance companies who sign blanket policies for employer's liability in big factories find that most of the accidents for which they have to pay compensation are caused by the clothing of the workman catching in some revolving gear or wheel. Some projecting fold or slackness in the clothing catches first, and an arm or leg is drawn after it. At the instance of these companies, so-called "safety clothing" is being designed to minimize this danger. Not only are all unnecessary folds removed, but necessary aprons, smocks, etc., are being made so that if caught in the machinery they tear apart instead of dragging the wearer after them. This result is achieved by using snap fastenings instead of sewing the parts of the garments together.

Political Announcements.

Believing that I may be able to render efficient service to the people of Garrett county in the next session of the Legislature I hereby announce my candidacy for nomination for House of Delegates subject to the approval of the Republican voters at the Primary Election September 11. To the Republican Voters of Garrett County.

I desire to say that it is not convenient for me to make a personal canvass of the county, therefore I adopt this method of informing our people that my past experience in the legislature will be at your service.

If elected I may be the only old soldier in the House of Delegates and my army experience of nearly four years would qualify me to be of service in the passage of laws to safeguard the interest of our boys from Garrett county in the present great war.

I think I may confidently count upon the support of my Republican friends generally and especially my old soldier comrades in arms, their sons and grandsons.

Yours for service,

JAS. A. HAYDEN.

Mt. Lake Park, Md., August 23rd, 1917.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett County.

As the primary election day is drawing near I take this method of addressing the Republican voters of the county.

I have visited every district during the past few weeks and expect to make another visit to the several communities prior to the election, but it will be impossible for me to see personally every voter owing to the lack of time.

If nominated and elected to the office of Sheriff I will endeavor to give the office my best attention and to discharge the duties incumbent upon me without fear or favor.

Soliciting the votes of the Republicans throughout the county, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
ROY O. WINTERS.

MAN OPPOSED TO DRAFT ARRESTED

Jonas Hetrick, Farmer, Taken in Charge By Government.

Jonas Hetrick, a former resident of Garrett county, but who moved over into Somerset county, Pa., several years ago, residing near Savage, was taken in custody by secret service men one day last week and at Somerset, Pa., he was given a hearing, being released on $5,000 bail with his son Thomas as bondsman.

Mr. Hetrick was in Oakland recently, having accompanied his two sons here where they had been to answer the draft summons sent by the local board. He was very much worried fearing that both sons would have to go to the front at once, and it is alleged that he told his two sons "that he would like to get an army of mountaineers and march to Washington" to dispose of Woodrow Wilson. Someone hearing the statement sent word to Washington, his arrest following.

Mr. Hetrick is a man of perhaps 65 years of age. He is an excellent citizen and has reared a family of splendid young men. At Somerset when he was examined he stated that he did not mean or intend any disloyalty.

AUTO PLUNGED OVER EMBANKMENT

Charles Sprague is in Hospital Badly Hurt,

Charles Sprague, of Kitzmiller, is at the Hoffman Hospital, Keyser, with severe injuries sustained in having been pinned under an overturned automobile Sunday night about 8:30 o'clock at the fork of the Elk Garden and Beryl roads, a few miles from Piedmont. Mr. Sprague was turning his Dodge car when he lost control and the machine backed down over a forty-foot embankment, turning completely over. His wife and two children had left the car before he started to turn and thus escaped injury.

Mr. Sprague was pinned underneath the overturned tonneau. He sustained three fractured ribs. It is thought his lung may be punctured and that he may have sustained other internal injury. He is severely bruised about the chest. After having been given aid by Dr. A. B. Kalbaugh, Westernport, and Dr. T. L. Wilson, Piedmont, he was removed to Hoffman Hospital on Baltimore and Ohio train No. 12.

CAN NOT ACCEPT WORD OF KAISER

Peace Impossible While Militarism Dominates German People.

In a note sent to the Pope, he declared that the United States must continue to fight until it is satisfied that a peace treaty would be more than another "scrap of paper" to be torn by Germany's rulers at will. While the President's note is a rejection of peace at this time it leaves the road wide open for further discussion and proposition.

"We cannot take the word of the present rulers of Germany as a guarantee of anything that is to endure," he says. And later he adds: "We must await some new evidence of the purposes of the great people of the central empires. God grant that it may be given soon and in a way to restore the confidence of all peoples everywhere in the face of nations and the possibility of a covenated peace."

President Wilson declares flatly against an autocratic war after the present war; against annexation or indemnities other than restitution, such as payment of Belgium and the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France.

1. To make it clear to the people of the United States once more what they are fighting for; to still further crystalize public sentiment to the knowledge that this is our own war as much as England, France or Italy; that the United States nor any other nation on the face of the earth can feel security, or be safe, while an irresponsible government with tenth century doctrines that "might makes right," and twentieth century science to impose those directions, continues to exist.

2. To so phrase and express the peace beliefs of America that there might be no opportunity for causing discussion or disagreement among the allied nations, with which the United States is making common war against the German menace.

In line with these objects the President devotes special attention to the impossibility of taking the word of the German junker government for anything.

In line with his second object the President carefully avoids any discussion and makes only the slightest reference to questions which naturally would come at first at a peace conference—territorial realignments, indemnities, damages.

He says the purposes of the United States don't need to be related. And then that there may be no mistake in effect given them and they are these:

Make the world secure against war.

No dismemberment of Germany or her allies beyond necessity readjustment of territorial lines that nationality rather than sovereignity rule in the formation of government.

No economic or trade war after the war against any people.

Settlement of disputes by arbitration instead of force.

Prosperity through peace.

Intimations persisted in official circles this afternoon that President Wilson's note was based largely on convincing information that Germany is rapidly reaching a new alignment internally and that peace may come sooner than anyone thinks.

The Big Yough Camp was very busy Thursday morning in preparing for the basket picnic. Everybody was invited and when dinner was served there were 105 seated around the table. GARRETT COUNTY FAIR PREMIUMS

Prizes In Cash Offered Exhibitors in Many Departments By Management

While very little has been published or made public through the columns of the press concerning the annual fair to be held in Oakland on October 2, 3, 4, and 5, 1917, the management has been extremely busy arranging for the great big show to be held on the above dates. That it will be a big show there is no reason to doubt and that it will be Garrett County's best Fair there is every reason to believe, for the new management is throwing down the bars and inviting every farmer and tax payer in the county to come and make the Fair the success it should and will be if the proper encouragement is vouchsafed. The Fair management is doing its part by offering the array of prizes printed along with this article.

The "Book of the Fair" is being arranged and the copy for it will be in the hands of the printer within a very short time and a few days thereafter it will be completed and mailed to the patrons of the former fairs and also to those who in the years past failed to make an exhibit but are expected to this year.

The prizes offered by the management follows. The object in publishing the list in these columns is to give the exhibitors a week or more advanced notice prior to the issuance of the premium book:

In Behalf of Mr. E. A. Weimer.

To the Voters of Garrett county.

Since the announcement of E. A. Weimer for the House of Delegates I feel it the duty of myself and all the voters of Garrett county to put their untiring energies behind such a man as Mr. Weimer and support him faithfully.

This is not an effort of Mr. Weimer's own personal gratification. He comes before the voters of Garrett county only upon the persistent, urgent requests of the people demanding of him that he be a candidate, feeling and knowing the need of such a reliable practical, honest representative in this perilous trying hour of our country.

When first approached upon the matter Mr. Weimer refused to become a candidate, but later, after several urgent requests he replied that if he could be of any service to his country and state he was ready to make a sacrifice and become a candidate, feeling that he owed Garrett county his services for what the voters had done for him in past elections. Mr. Weimer has been tried out and is known to be the right man in the right place, at the right time. He is not seeking political honors and gain. He stands before the voters clear cut upon the merits of the confidence which he has never betrayed.

As a voter I have not an axe to grind, neither do I expect any personal favors. All that I am seeking is honest reliable representatives. Our county is polluted with office seekers who have in view personal gratifications, which have been a detriment to our county in the past and is today responsible for keeping our very best men from representing our people. Don't fail on Sept. 11th, to select the best men before you.

FOR A GREATER BALTIMORE!

BALTIMORE, June 7th, 1917.

To the Non-Partisan Greater Baltimore Extension League, Hon. James H. Preston, President.

Dear Sir:—

On February 16th, 1917, the Board of Directors of the Non-Partisan Greater Baltimore Extension League, in pursuance of the authority conferred upon them at the general meeting at which the League was organized, appointed the following committee to "prepare and report to the League a proper Bill enlarging the boundaries of Baltimore City, in accordance with the declaration of principles and purposes of this League":

HON. JAMES ALFRED PEARCE,
Former Judge of the Court of Appeals,
HON. HENRY D. HARLAN,
Former Chief Judge of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City,
HON. JOHN F. MUDD,
Former Senator from Charles County,
ALEXANDER R. HAGNER, ESQ.,
City Attorney, Hagerstown, Md.,
BENJAMIN A. RICHMOND, ESQ.,
Cumberland, Md.,
HON. GEORGE R. GAITHER, JR.,
Former Attorney General,
MESSRS. WILLIAM L. MARBURY,
S. S. FIELD,
W. CALVIN CHESTNUT,
JOHN H. RICHARDSON.

The Resolution appointing the Committee authorized the Committee to fill any vacancy that might occur in its membership and to appoint an additional member from the Curtis Bay and Brooklyn District.

His Honor, Judge Pearce, having been unable to serve, Hon. W. Laird Henry, of Cambridge, also a former Judge of the Court of Appeals, was elected by the Committee, in place of Judge Pearce; and, subsequently, the Committee appointed, in pursuance of the power conferred upon them, Mr. James P. McGovern, as a representative of the Curtis Bay and Brooklyn District.

The Committee held its first meeting on February 28th, organized by the election of Hon. Henry D. Harlan as Chairman and W. Calvin Chestnut, Esq., as Secretary, and began the consideration of a proper bill for extending the City Limits, taking Senate Bill 135 which passed the second reading in the Senate of 1915 as the basis.

Further sessions of the Committee were held on March 7th, 16th, 21st and 28th, and April 4th, 13th and 20th. At the fourth meeting, on March 21st, the Committee completed their tentative draft of the Bill and gave notice through the newspapers that the tentative draft had been completed and printed; that any one desiring a copy could obtain one, and that the Committee would meet on March 28th, at the League Headquarters, at 3 P. M., to consider any suggestions or criticisms any one might offer personally or by letter. The Committee met for further public hearings on April 4th, 13th and 20th. The Committee specially invited the County Commissioners of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties and also the Citizens' Committee of Baltimore County, to present their views to the Committee, either in person or in writing.

After hearing the views, suggestions and criticisms of all parties who desired to present their views to the Committee, the Committee have agreed upon a final draft of the Bill, and herewith present the completed Bill, as being, in their judgment, a proper, wise and fair measure for extending the limits of Baltimore City.

CITY LIMITS SHOULD BE EXTENDED.

The facts that the area within the present limits of Baltimore City is the most densely populated of any city in the country; that the overflow from Baltimore City—closely settled just outside the limits—has reached a population greater than that of any city in the State other than Baltimore; that it has been twenty-nine years since there was any extension of the City limits to the north or west, and one hundred and one years since there was any extension to the east; together with a proper consideration of the public health and the public peace and the opportunity which is now at hand for a tremendous development of the City and Harbor of Baltimore as a great manufacturing and shipping center, all demonstrate the necessity of so extending the limits of Baltimore City as to enable the City to make the most of the present opportunity, and to realize its highest and best development for the public welfare of the entire State.

The extension should be sufficient to provide for the needs and development of the City not only for the immediate present, but for a generation to come, because experience shows that extensions of the City limits can be obtained only after comparatively long intervals.

The area proposed to be added from Baltimore County is 46.5 square miles, a very small percentage, as there will be left to the county 600 square miles.

The area taken from Anne Arundel is 5.4 square miles, leaving to Anne Arundel County 425 square miles.

Both of said counties will retain the same position relative to the other counties, both as to area and population, which they now hold, and the increment of value to the remaining land in the counties, after the proposed extension due to proximity to the City, will be sufficient to leave Baltimore County with an assessable basis more than twice as great as that of any other county in the State and will leave Anne Arundel County with an assessable basis larger than that of any county on the Eastern Shore.

The Committee feel that the extension provided for in the present Bill is reasonable and certainly not too much to provide for the probable needs of the City in the near future.

FAIR TAX RATE FOR TERRITORY TO BE ADDED.

The proposed Bill provides that property in the territory to be added should be taxed at a rate equal to 60 per cent. of the full City rate for the year 1919, and that the per centage of the full City rate should increase 2 per cent. each year until the two rates become one at the end of 20 years. It was thought that the present City rate represents in part provision to meet the interest and sinking fund on old loans, the proceeds of which had been expended for purposes the benefit of which would not be fully received by the new territory, and that it would take some time before the new territory received the full City benefits, and, therefore, it was thought just—both to the taxpayers in the present City and to the taxpayers in the new territory—not to apply the full City rate at once in the new territory, but to begin with the percentage thereof stated and increase the percentage gradually until the two rates become one. This tax provision has the merit of simplicity and the further merit that it will become adjusted to the full City rate automatically, without the necessity of further action by the Legislature.

It is believed by the Committee that additional benefits to the property and residents in the territory to be added to the City, in the shape of better police protection, better fire protection, better school facilities, the advantages of the City Plan Commission and the Topographical Survey Commission and the Harbor Board, for the development of property, better health protection and other City advantages, will fully compensate the residents in the new territory for the small increase which this Bill provides, as compared with the present county rate which they are paying.

The Committee had a precedent, in a recent Act providing for enlarging the limits of Hagerstown, for the principle of a sliding scale, applying the full City rate gradually, as adopted in this Bill.

The Committee have not felt that it was within their province to deal with the present tax rate on rural property in the present annex, but are of the opinion that the Legislature should, by a separate Act, increase the rate on rural property in the present annex so that it should not be at any time less than the rate fixed in this Bill for the new territory to be added by this Bill. A 65-cent rate on real estate within the present annex 41 cents less than the present rate in Baltimore county—is an anomaly and injustice to the other taxpayers of Baltimore City which the Committee feel should be corrected by the next Legislature. This anomaly resulted naturally from the mistake that was made in the Act of 1888, in supposing that the Constitution required an Act for the extension of the limits of Baltimore City to be submitted to the voters in the territory to be added.

NO REASON FOR A REFERENDUM.

There was no reason for giving to the people in the territory immediately surrounding the City a veto power upon the progress and development of the City, and when, after the passage of the Act of 1888, the Court of Appeals decided that the Constitution did not so require, the way was cleared for proceedings upon logical principles. These principles demand that a matter which so vitally involves the welfare of the entire State as the growth and development of its chief city and harbor should be finally decided by the representatives of the people of the entire State, viz: the Legislature; and that the will of the State so expressed should not be subject to be vetoed or thwarted by a bare mjority of the comparatively few people of the State living in the territory proposed to be added to the City.

Your Committee, therefore, have perpared the Bill, to become effective upon being passed by the Legislature, so that the City limits will be extended by the Act of the Legislature, without any referendum, just as the limits of Hagerstown, Frederick, Cumberland and other cities of the State have been extended, and as the limits of Baltimore City, five times in its history, were extended. The only Acts, in the history of the State, extending the limits of a city or town ever submitted to a referendum, were the Act of 1874, attempting to extend the limits of Baltimore City, when the will of the Legislature was thwarted by the adverse vote of a majority of the people in the territory proposed to be added, and the Act of 1888, when the wise purpose of extending the City on three sides was nullified by the adverse vote of a majority of the Eastern section, with the result that the development in the territory to the east has been hampered and retarded as compared with the development to the north and west of the City limits as they existed prior to 1888.

These two Acts were passed under a mistaken view as to the requirements of the Constitution, and as that mistake has been cleared away by the decision of the Court of Appeals, the Committee feel that there should be a return to the precedents which governed the extension of the limits of Baltimore City five times, and which have governed the extension of the limits of other cities and towns in the State.

OPPORTUNITY FOR GREAT SHIPPING AND MANUFACTURING CENTER.

There is a magnificent opportunity immediately at hand for a tremendous development of manufacturing at Baltimore, and, as an encouragement to manufacturing, we have embodied in the Bill a provision exempting not only the plant and machinery, but all raw material, stock in trade and other personal property of manufactures within the territory to be added, there being an ordinance now pending in the City Council providing the same exemption for personal property used in manufacturing within the present City limits.

Our City is enjoying an era of splendid progress and improvement, both public and private. The advantages of the harbor and the surrounding land as a place for one of the great shipping and manufacturing centres of the world is becoming widely known. The Committee believe that in order to realize the highest and best development of the City and harbor of Baltimore, the whole territory connected with the development should be under the government of Baltimore City, rather than partly in the City, partly in Baltimore County and partly in Anne Arundel County, and that it is of great importance to have the extension of the City limits made by the Legislature of 1918, in order that the City may get the advantage of its proper standing in the census of 1920.

NO POLITICS IN BILL—NO ADDITIONAL POWER TO CITY.

There is no politics in the proposed Bill; but simply a matter effecting the best development from the standpoint of business, commerce, health and good government of this part of the State, and directly promoting the general welfare of the entire State. The passage of the proposed Bill will not give Baltimore City a single additional vote in the Legislature nor will it deprive Baltimore or Anne Arundel County of a single vote in the Legislature. The Committee, therefore, recommend to the League the approval of this Bill and express the hope that it may be approved and passed by the Legislature solely on the ground that they believe it to be a matter which will promote the public welfare.

RIFLE OLD-FASHIONED

Present War Has Demonstrated Its Faults.

"There was a day when our forefathers took down the musket from the wall and went forth to war. This was in the distant past.

Today the American youth packs a machine gun and bustles off to the front in an armored motor car.

As an instrument of modern warfare the rifle is old-fashioned. Officers of the war department have been advised by the military men of the various allied missions visiting this country that no time should be wasted to use the rifle. In trench warface it is only the sharpshooter or "sniper" who uses his rifle. The average soldier uses his rifle only as a stock for his bayonet, and the bayonet does the most of the work when the soldier "goes over the top."

Rifles are also used in the throwing of grenades, but for employment in actual battle, as in Civil War days, the rifle is out of date.

Modern soldiers do little or no shooting. The infantrymen, for the most part, still in the trenches dodging shrapnel until the order comes to charge—and the order for charge generally comes in the cold, grey dawn of early morning.

That the war department of the United States has learned some of the lessons of modern warfare is evinced by the fact that in the training camps of the Officers' Reserve Corps the rifle ranges are but little used. The men spend more time in learning the handling of hand grenades and bombs than in the handling of the Springfield rifle.

Barbed wire entanglements, trenches, hidden artillery, gas, liquid fire—all of these methods of war making have been unknown to the American soldier, who has pictured war as strife carried on to the tune of a military band. But the American soldier is learning rapidly, for he has heeded the lessons of the English brother and his French cousin. When he finally enters the great European war theatre he will at least know what to expect, even though it may be strange to him, and perhaps he will give just a little sigh as he lays aside his rifle and takes up a hand grenade.

Zihlman and Brumbaugh to Speak at Hagerstown.

Governor Brumbaugh, of Pennsylvania, and Congressman Frederick N. Zihlman, of the 6th Maryland district, will be the principal speakers at the Labor Day celebration to be held in Hagerstown on September 3rd.

The joint labor organizations of the Western Maryland Railroad are making arrangements for a large celebration, and a large street parade and an all day picnic in the City Park is planned.

PROGRESSING IN ORTHOEPY.

According to a dispatch from Amsterdam the foreign department of the Imperial German government has suggested to the Kaiser the desirability of creating an independent federal state out of Alsace-Lorraine. Chancellor Michaelis returned last week from main headquarters with permission for the formation of sub-committee of the Reichstag to consider the proposition, and with the consent of the crown the much-fought-over province will be transformed into an independent German state. The news indicates halting but nevertheless encouraging progress on the part of the Kaiser in orthoepy. If he manages to stutter over Alsace-Lorraine, there is hope that he moy soon be able to say Belgium, and as he traverses the alphabetical line he should, by the time he reaches the R's, be able to pronounce Restitution and Reparation with a precision and distinctness that will satisfy the 17 national teachers who are now engaged in giving him lessons in humanity and the sacredness of international agreements. He has been an incorrigible pupil, and is still stubbornly enduring punishment, but we insist that this proposal regarding Alsace-Lorraine indicates a gleam of intelligence. Now, the next word, Bel-gium!

ON SCHEDULE TIME

Of what use are the eloborate precautions for secrecy in the departure of vessels from American ports if submarine commanders some three thousand miles away know precisely the day and make their plans accordingly? The master of the American schooner Childe Harold, torpedoed off the French coast June 21, tells a story which should stir the Government to discover by what means Oerman spies send out such information. There is no question as to the means of acquiring it. The suppression of announcements in the newspapers is nothing to them. Only the other day an employe of the Norddeutscher Lloyd was arrested upon the charge of checking the ships as they passed the New York Quarantine Station, near which he was living. There are hundreds of aliens who know what ships they are through the disguise of war paint, or can easily find out. But how do they communicate with Germany? Are there any unsuspected wireless plants on American soil? Can messages be got through to Mexico uncensored?

The first question which the German commander asked when Captain Byrne had brought his boat alongside the submarine was as to the whereabouts of two other vessels. "They sailed with you out of New York," he said, "and as you are here they should be somewhere in the neighborhood." "Search me," was the American's answer. Then an officer from the submarines went abroard the schooner and searched the horizon until one of the expected ships was sighted. The rest of the story is not unfamiliar. Captain Bryne discovered that the commander had been in the merchant service and they had many mutual acquaintances; and in his simple seaman's way concluded that "it would be smooth sailing for us." Yet he and his crew were left in an open boat, badly damaged, on a rough sea, and they owed their lives to a merchantman that picked them up later. This German brand of brutality is a mere detail in the record; what is most significant is the foreknowledge of the course and position of the victims. What is the Government going to do about it?

Notice to Municipal Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given that after August 31s, 1917, all unpaid municipal taxes for the years 1914 and 1915 will be placed in the hands of officials for prompt collection.

SURPRISING FIGURES

Number of Automobiles In Oakland Sunday Probably 700.

Mr. Thomas Harne, of Oakland, who on account of his affliction is almost a "shut-in" to while away the time on Sunday's, has kept an accurate account of the number of automobiles, during certain hours of the 19th and 26th, coming into and going out of Oakland over the State road leading north to the National Pike and has submitted the same to THE REPUBILCAN for publication, thinking the figures thus made will prove interesting to our readers.

On August 19th in the forenoon and between two o'clock and six o'clock in the afternoon the number of cars going out and coming in was 338. Going out—169; coming in—169.

For Sunday, the 26th inst., our reporters figures are as follows: Cars entering and leaving Oakland in six hours and thirty minutes—433. Coming in—209; going out—224.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Services at the M. E. church Sunday morning and evening. Dr. U. S. Wright in the morning and the pastor in the evening.

Rev. J. H. Enlow and family left for their home in Pittsburgh Monday.

There are many rumors floating about with reference to next season here; one to the effect that a company will lease the stand privilege on the grounds, including the lake and ice plant, base ball grounds, etc., for a period of ten years, and put in many amusements for our summer visitors.

Threshing has developed the fact that the oat crop in this vicinity is larger than was anticipated. Daniel Orendorf threshed about 1200, the yield being about 60 bushels to the acre. The yield will be about the same on the Weber, the Stephenson, the Henry Harvey and the Baker farms, all having a large acreage.

Potatoes are now selling here at $1.00 per bushel.

SHOULDERS FOR ALL STATE ROADS

The State Roads Commission will ask the next General Assembly to provide an appropriation with which to construct shoulders for all highways which have been improved and which will be improved in the future. The improvement will be urged on the ground that there is a general demand for wider roads. Another argument will be that many accidents can be avoided by the addition of the shoulders.

The commission will also recommend that more stringent laws to regulate use of the state roads by heavy motor-trucks which have been destructive and costly.

The work of building improved roads through incorporated towns is progressing rapidly. Half a dozen towns are now witnessing the work. This improvement has been retarded by the failure of the several towns to make provisions for smooth-surfacing the space between the roads built by the state and the pavements.

Young Officers Leave.

Three of Garrett county's young men who received commissions from the War Department on the 15th inst. as officers in the United States Reserves, have gone to the respective points whence they were ordered by the Department. Lieutenant Albert Ely left on Sunday night for Lexington, Ky., where he will be stationed for the next three months. Lieut. D. Earle Smith went to Petersburg, Va., Sunday afternoon, and Lieut. Charles Morris Sincell left on Tuesday afternoon for Camp Meade, near Annapolis Junction, Md. The duties devolving upon these young men are numerous. In addition to regular routine work in camps where from 40,000 to 60,000 men are or will be stationed, they will be charged with getting into fighting trim the raw recruits and drafted men who will begin to assemble on September 5th.

Indian Camp Fire Picnic.

There will be an all day Indian camp fire picnic held in Howard Brenneman's grove at McHenry, on the state road, Saturday, Sept. 1st. Sandwiches, hot coffee, fruit, cake and ice cream will be served on the grounds. There will be speakers and music. A ball game in the afternoon. Indian songs and recitations with the boys giving a medicine dance around the camp fire in the evening. At 2 p. m. Rev. A. D. Appleton will give a special talk to the boys.

An Indian souvenier will be given to the young person wearing the most picturesque home devised indian costume. The three judges in the contest will be Mr. E. A. Browning, County Agent A. G. Middleton, Attorney A. Totten Matthews, who will make the presentation.

WHERE TO GET WAR FOOD SCHEDULES.

Firms Are Required to Report on Stocks of Provisions.

Since the Federal law requires that all firms having commercial stocks of foods shall make returns of what they have on hand or in transit on August 31, the United States Department of Agriculture, charged with carrying out the provisions of the law, has designated certain places within each State where the blank food survey schedules may be obtained. These blanks are to be filled in duplicate, one copy to be retained by the reporting firm and the other to be sent to the Department at Washington. In this State the survey blanks may be obtained at Office of Federal Grain Supervision, 409 Garrett Office Building, Baltimore. Each blank has spaces for recording the stocks of 18 principal commodities, including the chief food cereals, meats, lard, oils, fish, sugar, and condensed or evaporated milk. Elevators, mills, dealers, canners, bakers, confectioners, manufacturers, jobbers, packers, grocers, hotels, department and general stores dealing in groceries, and other types of business to the number of about 100, are required to report their stocks not later than September 10, though an extension of time may be granted by the Secretary of Agriculture on special request if a good reason can be shown.

The survey of August 31, in so far as it concerns the supplies of 18 principal foodstuffs is a preliminary one, to be followed by a more complete one after the crops are harvested. For the complete schedule the blanks call for returns on 103 items. Blanks giving all information have been mailed to some 350,000 firms, but any firm which has not yet received these blanks should apply at once to the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, Washington, or to the nearest State address given above. While the returns are required under the law, with a heavy penalty for noncompliance, it is expected by the Department that all firms will consider it their patriotic duty to fill out and return the schedules as requested.

Heavy Demand For Cordwood This Winter.

The Maryland State Board of Forestry in a bulletin just issued says:

All indications point to an extraordinary demand for fire wood this coming winter and probably also for the following winter. This is due to the increase in cost of coal and particularly to the difficulty of securing it, especially in the small towns, owing to the shortage of cars. This difficulty is certain to increase. The situation offers a splendid opportunity to farmers and woodland owners generally to cut and utilize trees killed by the Chestnut Blight, tops and laps resulting from lumbering operations, as well as the taking out of inferior trees in the nature of thinnings and improvement cuttings in the woodlands.

One of the great hinderances heretofore to the practice of good forest management has been to find a market for this low grade material, and the probable demand for fire wood seems to offer a solution. Wood cut during July and August should be sufficiently seasoned for marketing the latter part of this winter, while dead sound wood may be cut even later and will likely find a profitable market.

Those who can cut wood for next winter's delivery would do well to make arrangements with the local wood dealers or directly with consumers in the towns so as to contract for the cutput in advance.

The State Forester, Baltimore, Maryland, will be glad to assist those who are likely to have any quantity of wood for sale and to give advice or find a market for it. Upon application the Forester will go over the woodlands of anyone in the State, advise him on the ground as to its management, and where thinnings or improvement cuttings are advised the Forester will mark a sample acre or half-acre as a guide in the work. This is done without charge except the actual travel expenses.

Judge Henderson's Term May Be Lengthened.

The next legislature will be asked to extend the terms of Judges Robert R. Henderson and Martin L. Keedy, of the Western Maryland circuit, for one year, in order that the election of their successors may take place at the regular election in 1919, instead of at the congressional election next year, when only national issues will be involved. The constitutional convention of 1867 in fixing the terms of judges at 15 years overlooked the fact that the election of their successors would fall in even years when presidential and congressional elections occur. As a result the General Assembly has been called upon in numerous cases to extend terms for one year. This practice has been possible under an enabling act passed in 1880 for a constitutional amendment, which was approved in 1881.

This amendment provided that after the first election of judges under the Constitution of 1867 there shall be held in every fifteenth year thereafter an election for judges.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

County Meeting at Accident September 20th and 21st.

The Annual Convention of the Garrett County Sunday School Association will be held at the Lutheran church in Accident on the 20th and 21st of September, and it is the expectation of the State and county leaders that there will be a large attendance at all of the sessions.

The convention will open in the afternoon of the 20th and close with a night session on the 21st. A strong program on which many of the county and State leaders in church and Sunday school work in the county will find it well worth their time to attend all of the sessions.

The attention of Sunday school superintendents is especially called to the necessity for early action in the election of Delegates and the forwarding of reports to the County Secretary, Mr. A. T. White, Mt. Lake Park, Md. A number of blanks for reports have been sent by the secretary to the District secretaries named below and superintendents are requested either to communicate with them and secure the blanks or else to communicate with the County Secretary at once regarding the same. Superintendents should also hold the election of delegates at an early date and forward the list of the same to Mr. J. L. BOTH PHONES PROMPT SERVICE

NORTH GLADE

We regret to learn that our nearby neighbor, Wm. Warnick, was seriously injured last week, at Bloomington while driving a horse which frightened and ran away.

Clarence Cohner and wife, of Brownsville, Pa., have been visiting their parents here. Wm. and Mrs. Cohner accompanied them home on their return this week.

Quarterly Conference, held here 18 and 19 inst., was largely attended. Dist. Supt. Moore gave us two most excellent sermons upon that occasion. Messrs. Fitzwater and Rodeheaver, also Mrs. Fitzwater, of Oakland, attended these services.

The picnic held at Meadaw Mountain recently was quite a success.

The good ladies of North Glade are preparing to hold a picnic on Saturday, Sept. 8th, for the benefit of the M. E. church. We expect good addresses, good music, good recitations and a good time generally with plenty of refreshments, hot coffee and palateable lunches served. We also expect some lively ball playing. All are most cordially invited to come and assist in a most worthy cause.

TRI-STATE BUSINESS SCHOOL CHANGES HANDS

Chas. S. Catherman, Manager of Strayer's College, Baltimore, Takes Over Local Institution.

The Tri-State Business College formerly the Mountain City Business College which was started in 1901, has been sold by B. Frank Shaffer to Chas. S. Catherman, manager of Strayer's Business College, Baltimore. Mr. Catherman has already taken charge of the school and will continue to operate it under the name of Catherman's Business School. Mr. Shaffer, the retiring owner and manager, has been connected with the school since May, 1904, a period of thirteen years.

Extensive improvements will be made to the school building on South Centre street. The interior will be repainted and decorated, and entire new equipment will be installed. The second and third floors of the building will be used for school purposes. Mr. Catherman will retain the present factuity and make additions from time to time. Accommodations will be made for from 150 to 200 students.

The new head of the local business school is one of the best educators in the country. He has been in school work for about twenty years, and has numerous testimonials as to the high standard of his work. Mr. Catherman is a graduate of West Chester State Normal School, Westchester, Pa.; the Pierce Business School, Philadelphia; and the Emerson School of Efficiency, New York. He has been managing Strayer's Business College, Baltimore, the largest in the state for many years.

In addition to the course now given at the school, Mr. Catherman will introduce courses in secretarial training, civil service work, telegraphy, accountancy and personal efficiency. During the winter a special course will be offered once a week in penmanship and rapid circulation.

Mr. Catherman believes there is a splendid field in Cumberland for an up-to-date business school, and will endeavor to make the local institution a leader in its line.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

WHAT ABOUT SPECULATION

AN experienced stock broker, after retiring from business, made this significant remark: "I have never known a business man to speculate two years successfully." The fall of many a man may be traced to speculation. It is unsafe for any man with a limited amount of money to risk it in speculation. The Bank is the best and safest place for surplus money.

FROM A SOLDIER BOY

Leo Lyon of Oakland. Writes From Fort Oglethorp, Ga.

To the Editor of The Republican.

We simply ask for enough space to let you know that Oakland is right on the map at Ft. Oglethorpe and that we are gradually drifting from the rookie stage to rank one and all fine specimens of American manhood, to typify in our future service the high qualities of the American soldier—courage, daring, chivalry and unflagging zeal in the cause for which we enlisted, to have a part in the most dramatic chapter in our history.

There are some yet who do not realize that war is actually at hand, and their country's stake in this the greatest war for civilization, for justice and humanity. Some stay at home for protection but at the same time branding himself with the most opprobrious of all terms, "a slacker." The war is going to end, that is certain, and we have no reason to doubt the outcome of this conflict, but we have come to the point where we must sacrifice many things for our own welfare and they that do this will be the heirs of our world's prosperity, and they are not going to make these sacrifices and permit those who stay at home to enjoy the blessings of peace for which their sacrifices are being made, without protest, therefore the young man who is eligible will some day regret or pay the penalty under the supreme contempt of "a slacker."

The fellow who has said he would rather be a live coward than a dead hero was a fool. Any man had better be dead than have the world estimate him as a coward. The mother of a boy would find more consolation in standing above his grave, than she would realizing that she had raised "a slacker," a weakling, a pampered pet who had overlooked the only opportunity to be of some use to the world.

Sometimes as we approach hardships we stop and wonder why this great nation of the highest ideals has to be called to arms for freedom and right but we then cheer up knowing that we are boys among the most manly lot of boys that this nation has ever developed.

We were glad to welcome two more Oakland boys to our camp last week: Delbert Davis and Grover Compton. T. A. Currey, Robert E. Helbig, Harold M. Dawson, Leo S. Lyon are permanently assigned to the 1st Evacuation Hospital in American history and in training for non-commissioned officers; also W. F. King, assigned to 54th Infantry Field Hospital infermary.

We are all enjoying ourselves, contented (as we have to be), with camp life and the sun rays of Georgia and expect to soon advance to another land with greatest prospects of returning with the banner of victory.

Very respectfully,
LEO S. LYON,
Evac. H.—M. O. T. C., Camp,

Miss Marie Selby, of Baltimore, who spent a week or ten days in Oakland with relatives, returned to her home Tuesday morning.

Rev. S. E. Wicker, pastor of St. Mark's church, returned to Oakland Tuesday evening from a visit of three weeks to his former home at Altoona, Pa., where he was the guest of his parents and two brothers who have been called in the Army. Mr. Wicker's return to Oakland was hastened by a summons to appear before the local exemption board for examination yesterday.

Mr. Howard Eckles, of Fairmont, who was struck by an automobile while standing in the road near the home of Mr. W. H. Smouse, south of Oakland, returned to his home yesterday morning. Mr. Eckles injuries were even more serious than first reported, both his legs being involved as well as his chest. While the injury to his chest is about well, he is still unable to walk.

Along the banks of Muddy Creek and near the falls of that stream, is camped for an outing of two weeks a party of eight boys in charge of Playford Naylor. Those in camp in addition to the above named are Townshend Naylor, Jennings Shultz, Robert Porter, Uriel Cheuvront, Harold Harned and Everett Casteel (occasionally), Ralph and William Davis. The boys are thoroughly enjoying themselves and will break camp on Tuesday next.

Can I help but feel so lonely
When his voice I do not hear,

Under the sod, where he peacefully sleeps.

THE FARM LABOR BUREAU AND ITS CO-OPERATION WITH THE FARMER

County Agent, Under Maryland Council Of Defense Law, To Aid Farmer In Every Phase Of Increased Produttion.

Under the Act of the General Assembly at its special session last June, when it passed a law authorizing a Council of Defense for Maryland, appropriating one million dollars for its preparatory work for war, it stipulated that $200,000 of the million was to be spent toward agricultural development and extension and the conservation of food.

The increased planting of food stuffs, which is yielding almost double production, requiring more farm labor than heretofore, coming at a time, when a scarcity of labor is being felt in every line of work, due to the men being drawn from the fields to the ranks of military service, and to the demand for labor made necessary by increased production in materials for warfare, such as in the munition plants, ship building yards and cantonments, which are springing up in every section in every state, it was necessary for the protection of the farmer, so that his crops would not suffer from want of help to harvest them, to establish a Farm Labor Bureau, whose functions are to provide sufficient labor to yield the greatest production of the crops planted.

To reach the farmers of the State and to provide a speedy and efficient working force to see that the wants of each county was supplied, the Maryland Agricultural Extension Service, with County Agents in each of the counties, with the United States Department of Agriculture and the United States Department of Labor, co-operating, have perfected their organization whereby practical assistance can be given any farmer of the State in need of help along the agricultural line.

Extraordinary efforts are being made by County Agents to have the farm laborers in their county work the full week, as well as trying to have those who have left farm work for other vocations, to go back on the farm, and in many instances the County Agents have been able to fill the requests for farm labor without going out of their county for help, which class of help is most desired by the farmers. In cases where the County Agent is unable to supply the demand for labor from his own county, he makes application to the Farm Labor Bureau, located in the Stewart Building, Gay and Lombard Street, Baltimore, who, by aid of advertising and farm labor scouts, secures the labor desired, where possible, and ships it to the County Agent, who distributes it on the farms needing help.

Being a State Office, no charge is made to the farmers asking for farm hands, but in cases where there is a transportation charge in getting the help from one county to another, the farmer is expected to pay that charge, and in making application to his County Agent for farm help, he is expected to state just what his needs are, whether he wants a man for temporary or permanent work, whether he prefers a married or single man, whether he will provide lodging and board or just lodging or just board, whether he has tenant houses for married help, what he will pay and the character of work he expects to have done. With this information at hand, the County Agent is able to make a selection of the men to be placed, which is found to be of great advantage, not only to the farmer, but to the farm hand who makes a much better satisfied laborer.

The need for increased production in all food crops cannot be too strongly urged at this time, and with the farm labor situation solved, practically assuring the farmer that he need have no fear as to securing help when it is needed, every farmer is urged, as a patriotic duty and on the personal and special request of the President of the United States, to plant heavier crops this fall than ever before.

If you do not know who your County Agent is write, phone or ask the editor of this newspaper.

MARYLAND'S CROPS MUST BE SAVED

Every Man, Woman And Child Can Render a Patriotic Service By Helping Conserve Our Food Supply.

Help must immediately be given the canners of Maryland, if President Wilson's wishes are to be carried out and if the war, which is involving every civilized nation, is to be won by America.

Every energy of the Government has been concentrated on increased food production. The farmers of America have nobly responded to the call and Maryland was no laggard, as the present crop reports show, but a condition has arisen which calls for the rank and file of our people to respond to the appeal of Herbert Hoover, in charge of the Nation's food to help conserve our increased production and prevent a waste of perishable crops.

Cooperating with the Government in its efforts to conserve all food supplies, General Carl R. Gray, Chairman of the Maryland Council of Defense has asked and received the acceptance of Messrs. C. C. Homer, Jr., John B. Ramsey and Walter B. Brooks to serve on a committee to assist the canneries in securing the necessary help to prevent any waste or spoilage of perishable crops and unless this Committee is successful in its efforts, a great amount of the increased food produced from the farms will be lost to the country.

In 1916 Maryland packed over six million cases of the thirteen million cases of tomatoes packed in the entire United States and in addition packed several million cases of corn, peas and other canned vegetables and fruits.

In 1917—this year—Maryland can almost double her production. The crops are ready to be picked. Maryland can help save the nation and possibly some of her allies from starving, if the people of Maryland will make that patriotic response to which they have in the past been so accustomed.

A great emergency is upon us.

The President has made his appeal.

The farmers have loyally and nobly responded and have done their share.

The tomato crop is in the field ready to be picked, delivered to the canneries and canned.

BUT IN FILLING THE RANKS OF OUR ARMY—IN FILLING GOVERNMENT ORDERS FOR WAR MATERIALS AND SUPPLIES—IN BUILDING SHIPS AND GUNS AND AEROPLANES FOR OUR SUCCESS IN THE WAR—WE HAVE USED UP THE LABOR NEEDED IN OUR CANNERIES—AND UNLESS IT IS REPLACED BY PATRIOTIC VOLUNTEERS OUR HEAVY PRODUCTION OF CROPS WILL BE ALMOST A TOTAL LOSS.

The call is sounded for help to man the canneries.

Every man, woman and child, above the age of fourteen, can "do their bit."

Every man, woman and child, loyal to their Country, must do their share.

President Wilson on July 11th said:

"I shall expect every man and woman who is not a slacker to be at my side throughout this great enterprise. In it no man can win honor who thinks of himself."

The crops of Maryland must be saved.

The canneries are providing wholesome and sanitary surroundings, the work is not laborious, the pay is liberal, the work is patriotic.

School teachers on vacations are enlisting in the canneries to help out. School boys and girls by the hundreds are ready to respond. Married women without children are closing their homes temporarily in order to do their share. Factories have arranged to work half their force, releasing the other half of their employees to spend the five weeks necessary in the canneries. Everywhere is the sacrifice being made.

Women who have never worked in their lives, but who are familiar with home canning are answering the appeal of the Government to help in the canneries. Women, who in their youth worked in canneries are returning this year in response to the country's call.

In every county of the State, there is a Section of the Maryland Council of Defense. The help each person might give may be in their own locality.

Every section of the State is organizing to win the war—to save Maryland's crops—to cooperate with the President and to be loyal to our country.

Volunteer today that you will work in a cannery for five weeks. Form a little club of ten or twelve members—you can all stick together for company—and you will be helping to do your share.

Send your name to Mr. James Steele, Secretary of the State Canning Committee, Fayette and Guilford Streets, Baltimore, who will advise you who to report to in your own county.

Oakland, Md.

Gentlemen:—

I beg to call your Board's attention to the fact that by the Act of 1916, Chap. 569, codified as Section 17A of Article 33 of Bagby's Code, and as Section 17A in the 1917 Pamphlet of the Election Laws of Maryland, a registration is required to be held in each of the counties of the State on the Tuesday preceding primary election day. As primary election day this year falls on Tuesday, September 11th, this registration will be held on Tuesday, September 4th.

I am calling your Board's attention to this fact because the 1917 Pamphlet of the Election Laws inadvertently omits referernces to the registration required to be held in the counties on September 4th.

Several of the Boards of Supervisors of Elections have made certain inquiries of my Department with respect to this registration, and I beg to submit my answer thereto, for your information.

1—Notice of the time and place of the registration to be held on September 4th must be given for the period and in the manner provided by Section 14 of Article 33 of Bagby's Code. While Section 17A does not specifically provide for such notice, yet section 14 applies to every registration held in the State.

2—Section 17A, providing for the September 4th registration, applies both to adults and to persons attaining their majority, as follows:

a. Adults who have not been registered prior to September 4th and who will be entitled to vote at the general election in November, are entitled to register on September 4th, and to vote at the primary election on September 11th, and also, of course, at the general election in November.

b. Persons who become twenty-one years of age between the last preceding general registration day and the registration of September 4th, may register on September 4th, and may vote at the primary election on September 11th, and also, of course, at the general election in November.

Such persons will not be entitled to vote at the primary election of September 11th unless they do register on September 4th, because Section 182, (which allows persons not twenty-one years of age to vote at a primary, provided they will become twenty-one before the general election succeeding the primary), only applies to persons "arriving at the age of twenty-one years after the close of the next preceding registration." In the present case, the next preceding registration to the primary election of September 11th will be the registration of September 4th, so that persons who become twenty-one before September 4th will not arrive at the age of twenty-one "after the close of the next preceding registration." Therefore, persons who become twenty-one before September 4th will not be entitled to vote at the primary election on September 11th unless they register on September 4th.

c. Persons who will become twenty-one years of age after the registration of September 4th and before the general election in November, may register on September 4th, and may vote at the primary election on September 11th, and also, of course, at the general election in November.

d. While persons who will become twenty-one years of age after September 4th and before the primary election of September 11th, may, as just explained, register on September 4th, yet such persons are not required to register on September 4th in order to vote on September 11th. They may vote at the primary election of September 11th, withott registering at all, in accordance with the provisions of Section 182. But in order that such persons may be entitled to vote at the general election in November, they must, of course, register at one of the October registrations.

3. After the close of the registration of September 4th, the registration books must be returned by the Boards of Registry to the Supervisors. They should not be retained until after the primary election is held on September 11th. Section 61 requires the Supervisors to deliver to the judges of election before the primary election of September 11th, sealed packages containing, among other things, the registers for such precinct. This provision could not, of course, be complied with unless the registration books are returned to the Supervisors, in order that they may be placed in the sealed packages.

Very truly yours,
ALBERT C. RITCHIE,
Attorney General.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Heavenly Recognition.

Continuing where I left off last week let me say that, the many mansions of heaven suggest the home life of the place. In these the saved live, not as hermits, but in groups, gathered by some law of association probably the same in principle that brings kindred spirits on earth together. In this connection let me quote the words of another, "Heaven is furnished with every accommodation. In it all those comforts will be found which we usually enjoy in a home such as rest, peace, society and friendship. It is a place of final meeting for the children of God, as the members of a human family, who are separated during the day and scattered abroad in pursuit of their respective employments, assemble in the evening in their common habitation."

Christ's description of the final judgment is evidence of the truth of the doctrine. In that description men appear not only as individuals but as social beings recognizing and communing with each other. Men are witnesses. I quote just here the words of an eminent theologian who said, "a judgment which will right all the moral inequalities of this stage of our existence is a necessity and unless the saints should know each other in the next life they could not acquiesce in the justice of the sentence pronounced on all." See Matt. 25: 31-46. Paul doubtless expected to know his Philippian brethren on that day and to rejoice in them as his crown of rejoicing. What an element of joy it will be then to every Christian heart when those he has been instrumental in saving have been publicly received in heaven. How the Christian mother who has gone on, will rejoice to welcome her children, whose tender minds she instructed in the words of God; whose feet she had directed in the way of holiness and whom she had taught to say, "Our Father who art in Heaven."

"In the world to come, should they go first,
How warm will be their greeting, when with toils
Finished on earth, we reach Jerusalem,
Which is above, and these in glory see,
Where the saints dwell and Christ forever reigns!
Be this our consolation and our hope."

Our knowledge will not be more limited there than it is here. Though we see through a glass darkly now, there it will be face to face. God has made us social beings and for an object. To attain this object we must be capable of knowing those by whom we are surrounded and unless death changes the faculties of our minds we will retain the same social natures we have on earth and hence to receive all the gratification we are capable of we must be able to recognize our associates there.

The transfiguration scenes confirms our belief. Some of Christ's followers knew the spirits of the just and if while on earth they could, shall not this privilege be enjoyed when by the grace of God, we have entered the abodes of glory. Death does not change our natures, but purifies and exalts them and strengthens our powers and cacapacitief to an infinite degree. The soul freed from sin and its effects, goes to the presence of God.

They do not cease to love, and in order to love they must know. Memory will doubtless retain the pure treasures it has gained on earth. The sanctified friendships of earth are written on the memory, and as friends know each other here by some characteristic so, "amid the perfectly refined spirituality of heaven in bonds of eternal love." Death of course destroys the pleasures of time which arise from the constitution of our bodies. There can be no sinful enjoyments, but at the same time, no pure spring of happiness from which the soul now drinks will ever cease its flow. Exalted friendships and communion of Christian souls afford us one of the purest pleasures of earth. I believe we shall form new friendships but at the same time those who especially loved and knew each other on earth shall be bound together by the recollection of the pure joys of life. Nor is this inconsistent with the love of Christ. He had his special love and as truly as we love Him shall we love the brethren, while we bestow a special love on those nearest to us. Jesus when on earth loved His church, but He loved the disciples as His own, yet in this circle he had his beloved John and beyond this Mary and Martha and Lazarus. Oneness of aims, interests and work bind us here. May not these form special circles of friends in heaven? It is not beyond reason to believe it. Yet the renewal of old and sacred friendships on earth will not hinder our forming new and wider ones. All barriers being broken down we will know and enjoy fellowship with those we never knew on earth. It often occurs that those unknown to us in infancy become our most intimate friends and are closely connected in our history.

In after years we meet the friends who knew us in our infancy, not as a stranger, but as an old friend with sympathy and intimacy like old kindred. So will it be with saint and angel. Angels are ministering spirits to watch us, and how delightful it will be to meet those who have guided, guarded and carried us safely through our eartly career, over the Jorden of death, into the new Jerusalem.

Should not a doctrine, sustained by such evidence, believed and supported by the ablest and most devout theologians of the world and a doctrine so abundant in consolation, have a practical bearing on our hearts. Here let us rest for the present.

JOHANNES.

LONDON LIKES OUR SOLDIERS

Physique Great And Faces Show They Have Brains, Says Expert.

In addition to the spontaneous welcome that the American troops received from the vast crowds that saw them parade through the streets of London yesterday, their work and their marching and alignment earned the encomiums of British military men, who hardly expected so much from what, comparatively speaking, are raw levies.

"Considering that practically all the officers and men who marched through London as the vanguard of America's new armies were civilians only a few short weeks ago, that their period of training had been only a few weeks and that even that brief period had been cut into by a long ocean voyage, the impression they made was extremely favorable. Their marching was sometimes not as steady as it might have been the distance were not well kept, the interyals between the units sometimes lengthening out to portentous proportions, and the handling of arms left a good deal to be desired, the rifles being sloped at all sorts of angles, and the piling of arms, when troops fell out, being rather badly done, but after all the piling of arms is a tricky business and can only be learned with time and practice. Time and practice will set right this as well as the other points noted.

"Seeing them march through London in column of fours, one is apt to forget that these men and particularly their officers, are experts in their own line of work—probably without their equal in the world and certainly without superiors. But even regarded only as the raw material of infantry, they would make an unforgettable impression. Their physique is magnificent, their average height being, as I should estimate on a rough guess, about 5 feet 10 inches, with plenty of breadth in proportion, and one look at their keen, clear-cut faces is enough to tell the observer that they have brains as well as brawn.

"Man for man, the 'Sammies' look smarter than the rank and file of the British Army, at least as far as uniforms are concerned, for that of Thomas Atkins is issued for purposes of economy. He has what are colloquially known as 'slackers,' namely, long trousers, which he wears without puttees in his hours of ease and over which he winds his puttees as best he can when on duty, whereas Sammy, in his well cut knickers from the waist down looks as smart as any English officer.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

GRANTSVILLE.

Clinton, the three-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Broadwater of Avilton, Md., died on Thursday morning as the result of accidental poison with laudanum. The child was brought to Dr. Bowen, after the laudanum was accidentally administered, and both Dr. and Mrs. Bowen worked beside the heart-broken parents all night, trying to save the life of the tiny sufferer who, however, died at about 4 o'clock on Thursday morning. The burial took place at Avilton on Saturday. Much sympathy is felt for the parents in their bereavement. They have two other children.

Master Edgar Stanton, son of W. E. Stanton of Little Crossing, met with a peculiar and painful accident on Friday morning. The men were engaged in loading wool at the mill, for shipment, when a large bag of wool, weighing about 200 pounds, struck the lad who had climbed into the wagon the men were loading. The bag struck the child on the face, throwing him against the side of the wagon, cutting a gash in his cheek, breaking one tooth entirely out and causing a number of others to become loosened. The boy's father hurried him to a physician who dressed his wounds.

The families of the Fortnightly and Sewing Clubs and a few friends held a picnic in Collier's Grove, near the Cove, on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Jacob Beachy was tendered the surprise of her life last Sunday when her husband and children planned a party for her in honor of her fifty-fourth birthday. Ice cream and cake was served. Mabel received a number of pretty gifts.

A Red Cross benefit was given at the Victoria Hotel on Thursday night. Dancing and cards were the amusements, the Salisbury orchestra producing most delightful music. A committee of ladies had the affair in charge and the Girl Scouts of Patrol No. 3 served the refreshments which were on sale. Between $45 and $50 was cleared for the cause.

To Whom It May Concern:

As President of Strayer's Business College, Incorporated, Baltimore, Maryland, I employed Mr. Charles S. Catherman as a teacher for that institution about fifteen years ago. Mr. Catherman came to us very highly recommended and he fulfilled all of our expectations.

The fact that Mr. Catherman remained with Strayer's Business College, Baltimore, for fifteen years, rising from his first position to that of head of the Commercial Department then to Superintendent of instruction, ane afterwards to acting Manager of the instution, speaks more eloquently of the high esteem in which he was held than any words that I could indite.

I understand that it is now the purpose of Mr. Catherman to engage in the school business on his own account and I take pleasure ih commending him to the favorable consideration of the people in any communaty in which he may locate.

Mr. Catherman's education and experience fit him to render superior service along the line of Commercial education to any persons who may favor him with their patronage and my knowledge of him as a man leads me to believe that no effort on his part will be spared to give his patrons the very best business training possible for them to procure.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett County.

I desire to say that it is not convenient for me to make a personal canvass of the county, therefore I adopt this method of informing our people that my past experience in the legislature will be at your service.

If elected I may be the only old soldier in the House of Delegates and my army experience of nearly four years would qualify me to be of service in the passage of laws to safeguard the interest of our boys from Garrett county in the present great war.

I think I may confidently count upon the support of my Republican friends generally and especially my old soldier comrades in arms, their sons and grandsons.

Yours for service,
JAS. A. HAYDEN.

Mt. Lake Park, Md., August 23rd, 1917.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett County.

As the primary election day is drawing near I take this method of addressing the Republican voters of the county.

I have visited every district during the past few weeks and expect to make another visit to the several communities prior to the election, but it will be impossible for me to see personally every voter owing to the lack of time.

If nominated and elected to the office of Sheriff I will endeavor to give the office my best attention and to discharge the duties incumbent upon me without fear or favor.

Soliciting the votes of the Republicans throughout the county, I beg to remain, Very truly yours,

District No. 7, ROY O. WINTERS.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 42. OAKLAND, MARYLAND THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1917. NUMBER 28

SEN. SPEICHER'S BROAD PLATFORM

Upon It He Stands and Will Carry Out Its Promises.

(From The Republican of Aug. 23)

Senator Harvey J. Speicher, of Accident, has consented to be a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket, having reached this conclusion after mature and deliberate consideration.

It was the intention of Mr. Speicher not to again enter the contest, but so much pressure was brought to bear upon him by his friends in every section of the county that he deemed it a duty as well as an obligation to them to allow his name to be placed upon the primary ticket. Appreciating deeply the expressions of his friends both verbally and through the columns of this paper Mr. Speicher, in an interview given out at his home in Accident on Saturday said:

"To the Republicans of Garrett county:

"After careful consideration of the many demands and requests through the columns of THE REPUBLICAN, as well as many personal requests, that I again enter the primaries for renomination and reelection to the Maryland Senate, I feel that under the circumstances and the present conditions of our country that I would not be true to my friends and my party should I decline to give my time, experience, influence and best service to my country's needs.

"I appreciate to the fullest extent the honor you have done me in twice electing me to the highest office within the gift of the people of my county. I have tried to serve you honestly, conscientiously and to the best of my judgment and ability, and by my long service and experience I fully agree with you who have requested that I serve you another term in the Senate, would place me in a much better position to serve the people of my county and State.

"I desire to say a few words regarding the road system of the State. We now have the finest road system of any State in the Union, of which every Marylander should feel proud, and now that the main artery of the State road is completed I hope to see the time when every district and town in our county will be connected up by a State road leading to the main system.

"If nominated and elected, as I hope to be, I will secure an appropriation to supplement the fund already appropriated to complete the road from Oakland to the State road system of Preston county, West Va., and use every honorable means to secure an appropriation from the State to complete the State road leading from the main road via Friendsville to the State line, there now being two miles of this road provided for under the Shoemaker Act. By securing such an appropriation from the State will relieve the taxpayers of the county from paying forty per cent. to complete this road as provided under the Shoemaker law, and if possible repeal the Shoemaker Act so far as it applies to Garrett county from the State under the law, placed in the hands of the County Commissioners to be given each district in the county its pro rata share so that every district may be benefitted instead of only a small section. I shall use all honorable means to secure an appropriation from the State to complete the State road leading from Gortner to the West Virginia line, also for a road leading from Swanton and Kitzmiller via Deer Park to connect with the main State road; from Grantsville via Jennings to Bittinger; from Bittinger to connect with the State road at a point to be determined by the citizens and the State Road Commission and to connect the Maryland State road from the National Pike to the Pennsylvania State Highway; also from New Germany to Grantsville.

"Garrett county being the best agriculture county in the State, there is nothing that would aid as much in the development of our county as these short spurs of good roads.

WHY NOT SENATOR SPEICHER?

A Largely Signed Letter of Appreciation for What He Has Done and a Demand That He Again Be a Candidate.

(From The Republican Aug. 9.)

The following letter, signed by prominent residents of more than two-thirds of the districts of Garrett county, has been received at this office and is published herewith.—Editor Republican.

To the Editor of The Republican.

We appreciate most highly all that Senator Speicher has done for Garrett county during the past eight years as a member of the Upper House at Annapolis, and we believe that now is the time for every Republican of the county to demand that he become the candidate for re-election this fall.

By the ability displayed by him in the State House he has shown to the State at large that he is a man well equipped to handle problems that confront the Nation and State at this time. It will reflect credit upon the electorate of Garrett county to re-elect him for another term and to secure his nomination and election we the undersigned pledge our best efforts.

Nominate Mr. Speicher, if he will become a candidate, and we trust that he will so decide. The time, the opportunity to bury personal differences and send a man to the Senate of Maryland who will be a credit to Garrett county, is at hand.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Appreciating the importance of selecting men for positions of trust especially at this time when the world at large, so to speak, needs the guiding hand of men of experience, of mental capabilities and sufficient business acumen to push them forward in the world and as a representative of the masses, we who have signed our names to the within letter, urge upon the Republican party of Garrett county as a whole to demand that Senator Speicher again become the candidate of the party for Senatorial honors He is the man of the hour in our community, which includes all of Garrett county, and in him we shall have a true advocate. With the world at war the country needs men of ability to handle the affairs confronting us and such a man we find in Senator Speicher who is known and has always stood for good citizenship. He is the acknowledged leader of the Republican forces in the State Senate and has reached that position simply because his colleagues in the Upper House have become convinced that he is well able to maintain his position and bring credit upon his party. He is without doubt able to lead the Republican ticket in the county to victory and we desire that he become a candidate for the nomination.

HERRINGTON MANOR GIVEN TO THE STATE

Tract Presented as Forest Reserve by Henry and Julian Leroy White

A tract of 700 acres of valuable land in Garrett county, known as Herrington Manor, has been given to the State by Henry White, former Ambassador to France, and his brother, Julian Leroy White. The property, a part of the old Schley estate, is about four miles west of Oakland, on the Oakland-Cranesville road.

It was given to the State as an addition to the Forest Reserve, and is regarded as an exceptionally valuable acquisition by the forestry experts. It includes an area of virgin white oak, one of the few areas of the kind in the State, and also about 200 acres of glade and pasture land, with 150 acres cleared. There are a house, stable and other buildings on the property.

State Forester F. W. Besley, who has just returned from an inspection of the property, said yesterday that he would put into immediate effect an efficient forest management and open the property, which will be known as Herrington Manor Reserve, to the free use of campers and tourists.

The donors of the land are natives of Baltimore and members of a family long distinguished in the State, but neither now lives in Maryland. Former Ambassador White now resides in Washington and has his legal residence in Rhode Island. Julian Leroy White lives in France, but still maintains his legal residence here.

GARRETT COUNTY FAIR PREMIUMS

Prizes In Cash Offered Exhibitors in Many Departments By Management

While very little has been published or made public through the columns of the press concerning the annual fair to be held in Oakland on October 2, 3, 4, and 5, 1917, the management has been extremely busy arranging for the great big show to be held on the above dates. That it will be a big show there is no reason to doubt and that it will be Garrett County's best Fair there is every reason to believe, for the new management is throwing down the bars and inviting every farmer and tax payer in the county to come and make the Fair the success it should and will be if the proper encouragement is vouchsafed. The Fair management is doing its part by offering the array of prizes printed along with this article.

The "Book of the Fair" is being arranged and the copy for it will be in the hands of the printer within a very short time and a few days thereafter it will be completed and mailed to the patrons of the former fairs and also to those who in the years past failed to make an exhibit but are expected to this year.

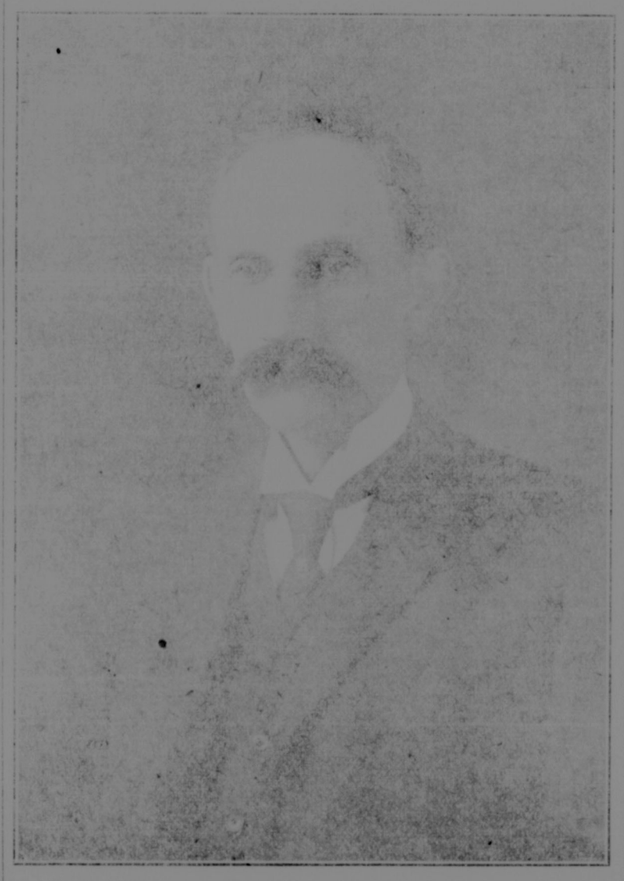
Candidacy of Mr. Elliott C. Harvey Well Received.



ELLIOTT C. HARVEY.

The candidacy of Elliott C. Harvey, of District No. 8, for the House of Delegates, has been most favorably received by the Republicans throughout the county. They recognize the wisdom of sending men to the Legislature who are experienced and trained for the work that confronts them as members of the Lower House. Mr. Harvey has not only had years of experience as a successful farmer and stock dealer, but also as a member of the Legislature for two terms where he was highly esteemed by his colleagues and by his constituents. In matters of legislation Mr. Harvey was always on the right side especially along the lines where the morals of the community which he represented as well as that of the entire State was concerned. His work for the temperance measures is still fresh in the minds of the people. In addition to being a man of well balanced mentality he has always been a sincere and active worker for his party and its candidates for many years. He asks for your support on next Tuesday.—Political advertisement, published by authority of the candidate.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Heavenly Recognition.

How it exalts the sanctified friendships of earth? It is an encumtive to incentive cultivate warm affection not only for those to whom we are bound by ties of nature, but for all the disciples of Christ.

The gospel is designed to unite all mankind in one common brotherhood. It should therefore destroy the selfishness of the human heart; break down avarice and lead to the cultivation of the widest benevolence. It should uproot feelings of prejudice and revenge and fill our hearts with kindness and forgiveness. When we truly live in this doctrine we are brought under the influence of the principal that regulates the society of heaven. What a stimulus it affords to the Christian minister. He can look forward to meeting his converts in the New Jerusalem. He will be an eye witness of their joys, and hear their voices in the songs of redeeming love. They will shine forth in his crown of rejoicing, and what a motive for faithfulness this is to every Christian. What a plea it affords for our laboring for the salvation of our friends, while the objection, what if we should miss some of our friends, should only make us more zealous in our efforts to bring them to Christ and save them from wrath to come and increase our own happiness.

The skeptic when he sees those whom he led astray will find his cup of misery increased. So will the false professor. The murderer will see his victim. The unfaithful minister will see the congregation he has lulled to sleep in false security. It, therefore, appeals to all impenitent to be prepared to meet those who are washed in the blood of the blood of the Lamb.

It is a terrible warning, for if you die while others are pressing into the kingdom, it will multiply your misery greatly to remember that you might have been as happy as they.

But to no class does it come with more comfort than to the mourner, for it comes to dry his tears; to soothe his anguish and heal his wounds. It bids them, hasten their preperation for the celestial world, for their communion is only suspended for a season. They are resting with the Beloved. They have joined the church of the first here; they are with Jesus the mediator of the New Covenant.

"They do not die;
Nor lose their mortal sympathy,
Nor change to us, although they change."

Their happiness is perfect but not yet complete for they wait for us and glories reappearing of Christ when they shall come to claim their bodies. Bending over the battlements of the celestial city, they beckon us home. But who can describe heaven with its many mansions. Jesus prepared the place for us, yet he has not told us much about it.

Moses and Elias came back at the transfiguration of Christ. One had been in that better land 900 years and the other nearly 1500 years as we measure time, but not a word was said about Paradise from which they had just come.

Lazarus, though he was with the redeemed for four days, yet said he nothing about his experience there. Paul, after his conversion was taken up to heaven, yet he said nothing about it for fourteen years, when he simply said, it was not lawful nor possible to tell what he saw or heard. Human language cannot portray the glory of heaven. Figures are used to represent it. But they are imperfect and so fall short of the reality as much so as earth is below heaven. If we enter Heaven we will not find any poor, for all are kings and priests unto God.

There will be no sorrow, no crying, no sickness, no death. Can a butterfly explain its new existence to one of its associates in the caterpillar state? Heaven must be experienced before any description can give an adequate conception of it. Our friends who have fallen asleep in Jesus are there. We weep not because they have ceased from pain and toil, but because we shall see them no more in the flesh, yet we rejoice in their glory patiently waiting our time. May we be ready to answer the call when He comes for us so that we may meet them when parting is no more.

"A few more years shall roll,
A few more seasons come,
And we shall be with those at rest
Asleep within the tomb.
A few more struggles here,
A few more partings o'er,
A few more toils, a few more cares,
And we shall weep no more."

May every one of my readers reach that blessed goal—Heaven, and share its glory.

Yours ever,
JOANNES.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Shetler, and son Paul, are visiting relatives at Johnstown, Pa.

The following was received from P. F. Gortner, a former Garrett county boy, now of Shabbona, Ill.

My partner, Bert Hagen and I left Chicago on the 23rd of July motoring east via Gray, Ind., and Laporte which is a large manufacturing town of threshing machines and farm implements. By noon we reached South Bend, Ind., where we stopped over and visited places of interest. By following the Goodrich guide we passed through the towns of Echart, Ind., where the large vehicle manufacturers are located, and Goshen a university town and it is a very beautiful city, very few of its kind were found in our travels eastward. Our first days drive took us to Stricken, Ohio, a distance of 220 miles from Chicago. At the end of the day we had passed through the cities of Toledo, Ohio, Norwick, Oberlin another university town and at 5:20 p. m. we reached the city of Akron, where I visited my brothers, Lee and Will. From Akron we went on an excursion to Niagara Falls and Canada and on the return trip we stopped over in the cities of Buffalo, N. Y., and Cleveland. In Buffalo we went through the Chalmer's auto manufacturing plant. Then after spending the remainder of the week in Akron we motored toward Pittsburgh and stopped over at Sharron, Pa., and went through the Carnegie steel rolling mills and the American steel tin plate mills which was very interesting to see how many processes the tin has to go through before it is ready for market. From Sharron we went to Pittsburgh, where we spent three days with my sister, Mrs. Robert Beach, from Pittsburgh we went to Frostburg and visited my sister Mrs. A. G. Davis also my uncles, Silas and C. C. Beachy at Accident and on August 7th we reached our destination, Mt. Lake Park, Md. After traveling a distance of 1,250 miles. On August 11th we were present at the Gortner family and relative reunion. We left Oakland August 15th at 7 a. m. for Shabbona, Ill., on return trip. We came by way of Wheeling, W. Va., Zainesville, Columbus and clear through to Indianapolis, Ind., on National road. We found this road in fairly good condition all the way through. From Indianapolis we traveled on the Dixie Highway via Frankfort and Lafayette, Ind. At Crown Point we struce the Lincoln highway which led us to Joliett and Aurora, Ill., then to Shabbona, which was our destination where we arrived on August 18 at 4:30 p. m., a distance of 750 miles, making an average of 250 miles per day. On the whole trip traveled two thousand miles averaging over 25 miles per gallon of gasoline and only two punctures. We sure can recommend the Ford car for long journeys.

RUSSIA'S PLIGHT.

The abandonment of Riga, Russia's important port to the Germans, and the belief expressed in diplomatic circles that this may be followed by the abandonment of Petrograd as the capital, is unpleasant news for the Allies. If it should result in any important stocks of Russian foodstuffs falling into the hands of the Germans, the latter may be temporarily tided over a crisis, just as they were last year when they captured the rich granaries of Rumania.

It would be hasty if not unfair judgment to accept the retirement from Riga as a criterion of what may be expected from Russia during the remainder of the campaign. Consider her plight. Harassed within as well as without; the recently dethroned royalists doubtless plotting with the enemy for a counter revolution; the civil ranks honeycombed with political fanatics of all creeds; the flames of anarchy fanned by the agents of the enemy who swarmed over the frontier when the revolution took place; the necessity for reorganizing the army as well as the civil government. Probably no nation in in modern times was ever confronted with so many and perplexing problems. Under these conditions it is no wonder that its defensive has weakened.

It is by no means certain, however, that Russia's plight is as bad as it appears at this distance. Military experts say that the occupation of both Riga and Petrograd will be of questionable advantage to Germany, and that the latter will soon be cut off from supplies in the rear through the closing of navigation by the rapidly approaching winter. It is also probable that, with the enemy compelled to subsist upon the occupied territory, the Russian people, though having experienced the rigors of German military rule, will be spurred to resistance. If Russia displays half the spirit of Belgium this is certain to be the case, and, Mondays event may prove the one thing needful to solidify the new Russian republic.

LET THE BOY STICK TO HIS SCHOOLING.

This is the month that youth thinks it has good reason to hate—the month when school opens.

We wonder how many boys that entered upon vacation in June without a thought but that September would find them back again at their lessons have been beguiled by war and the chance of high wages into letting opportunity slip by that will never come again.

The high cost of living tells, and many a boy has doubtless been forced to give up school and pitch in to help make both ends meet. But how many are there who have quit without real cause, with nothing to take them away save the idea that now, because positions are a-plenty and wages or salaries high, time can be gained by dropping lessons and taking to work.

No boy should sell his future if he can help it. The couple of years about sixteen do not really belong to him. He holds them in trust for the man he is some day to become can never get them back again.

There's a lot of humdrum about lessons; a lot that is tedious, a lot the advantage of which one cannot see very plainly at the time. But the effect keeps on accumulating mysteriously but surely. About this time—when a boy is sixteen, say—he has gotten a sort of an education; enough of one to get along with, perhaps, if the boy's earning power is seriously needed by his mother, but, oh, so rough, so in need of the cementing and smoothing out process that another year or two of study might insure.

Let no boy and no parent think that that additional year or so can easily be dispensed with or made up later; that an early and apparently convenient start in life can compensate for the sacrifice of it, or that there is anything of patriotism in leaving school with less of an education than one has the right and chance to obtain, simply because the country is short of labor. War or no war, the boy of today is the man of tomorrow to whom the country must look to carry the morrow's burdens and fix its standards. He has no present duty higher than that of preparing himself to the very utmost for the man's work ahead of him.—Baltimore News.

STUMBLING ON THE TRUTH.

Senator La Follette unintentionally did a public service in the course of his address in favor of the "conscription of wealth." He referred to the difficulty of the Finance committee in its effort to frame a definition of what constitutes the capital of a corporation or partnership upon which war profits are to be computed under the pending revenue bill. After working early and late with the aid of the most eminent economists in the country and giving the subject many weeks' consideration, no satisfactory definition was found, and a hastily adopted amendment, he said, left the matter to the books of the corporations. There is a paragraph in the bill, however, which refers the matter to the Secretary of the Treasury for final determination. It was in relation to the latter that the Senator stumbled on to a truth.

He called attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled to make an investigation into the capitalization of the corporations, in order to enforce the proposed tax, and this, he declared, was absolutely impossible. To support the declaration he recited the experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission in attempting to ascertain the capital of the railroads of the country. This commission, "with a force of hundreds and hundreds of trained experts, has spent five years on that subject and has only completed in a tentative way the valuation of two or three of the small railroads of the country," and it is accepted as a fact "that it will take several years to finish this great undertaking and arrive at a tentative result as to the capital actually invested and employed in the railroad business of this country."

That is the evil of much of the legislation vitally affecting the public. The legislator reaches a serious obstacle in trying to frame a statute law that will not impinge a natural law, and in his dilemma he shifts responsibility to some executive officer. The latter often makes an arbitrary ruling or jumps to a conclusion. The result is expensive litigation, economic loss, amendment, repeal, another attempt from a different angle, with another run around the circle.

Just now when so much emergency legislation is being enacted it is essential that new laws be explicit, that a minimum of action be left to the discretion of administrative officials, and that factious partisanship be, as nearly as possible eliminated.

THE DEATH RECORD.

JOSEPH A. LITZINGER.

While not unexpected, nevertheless the death of Joseph Augustine Litzinger, which sad event occurred Sunday evening at 5:15 o'clock at his home, 106 West Washington street Grafton, comes with a distinct sense of loss. Ill for two years with what was known to be a fatal malady, it was still hoped that the unusual effort made to prolong his life might enable him to survive for some time to come. But providence ruled otherwise.

The deceased was the son of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Litzinger, and was born at Oakland, Md., December 16, 1886, and at the age of 17 years came to this city. He is survived by his wife, his parents and three brothers, Harry, Dennis and Charles Litzinger, all of this city. The funeral will take place from St. Augustine Catholic Church tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, with funeral director John A. McCabe in charge.—Grafton Sentinel Sept. 3.

Bell Company Takes Over Opposition.

The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company Saturday midnight took over the franchise of the Consolidated Telephone Company and cut over the system, which is now handled through the Bell exchange. Morgantown, Fairmont, Mannington, Clarksburg, Sutton, Weston and Buckhannon are among the points included. These towns now have but a single telephone system. About 7,5000 telephones are affected in Clarksburg and Fairmont by the merger and several thousand others in the other places mentioned. The Bell exchanges in Fairmont and Clarksburg will employ 117 operators, an increase of 30.

Quarterly Meeting.

The first quarterly meeting for the Mountain Lake Park charge of the Methodist Episcopal church will be held at Mt. Lake Park next Sunday, September 9th. Dr. Archibald Moore, District Superintendent, will preach in the evening at 7:30 o'clock, and hold the Quarterly Conference in connection with this service.

FAMILY FLOUR TO BE CHEAPER

But the Price of Bakers' Bread Will Probably be Unchanged.

Prospects of an early and radical reduction in bread prices apparently vanished when Herbert Hoover, the food administrator, announced that the best the public may expect is a 16 ounce loaf for ten cents or possibly eight cents.

The eight cent loaf of 16 ounces is possible, Mr. Hoover said, only if bakers, retailers and consumers unite to eliminate wasteful distribution methods and co-operate to obtain a standardized loaf.

The price of family flour, Mr. Hoover said, should be reduced at the present price of wheat at least two or three dollars a barrel. Bakers' flour, however, will sell little cheaper than at present.

C. I. Corby, one of the prominent bakers of Washington, who, as representative of the baking interests of the country is serving as voluntary aid to Mr. Hoover, said last night that a 14 ounce loaf for five cents is not in sight. There probably would be a 16 ounce loaf for ten cents which would represent a slight reduction in present prices. Standardization, he said, would be hard to bring about since varying costs in ingredients that go into bread have made it necessary to increase or reduce the size of the loaf.

No move will be made toward price reduction, Mr. Corby said, until the food administration has announced its plan for dealing with the baking industry. It may be a month before the program is ready.

"The bakers," said a statement by Mr. Corby, "have been co-operating with Mr. Hoover and have supplied data and facts to assist the food administration in perfecting its plans relative to bread.

"The bakers respectfully request the public to disregard the many ridiculous statements about bread emanating from unreliable sources and ask that they await the announcement of the President relative to the nation's plans for bread production."

Several other Washington bakers sustained the statement of Mr. Corby.

Members of the wheat price committee which recommended the price of $2.20 declared after their work was ended that the committee was convinced it was possible to make and sell a 14-ounce loaf of bread for 5 cents.

The country's millers have agreed to hold their profits on flour to 25 cents a barrel. Under this agreement, Mr. Hoover said, flour should retail in New York at from $11.75 to $12.75 a barrel, and at about the same price in Washington. The price of bakers' patent flour to small bakers and retailers, he said, should be from $10.35 to $11.25. The average retail price of family patent flour in New York from April to August has been $15.36.

Red Cross Receipts.

Mrs. Julius C. Renninger, treasurer of the local Red Cross Society, reports the receipt of the following sums since her report published in these columns last Thursday:

Grantsville	$48.00
A. T. Watson	5.00
Total	$ 53.35
Amount reported last week	$416.28

It was announced that the camp will not be sufficiently ready for the men until the latter date.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

SENATOR SPEICHER HAS DONE HIS DUTY TO HIS CONSTITUENTS

Paul Winchester, Well Known Newspaper Man, Writes of Candidate.

The following letter from Mr. Paul Winchester, of Baltimore, who has been connected with the daily press of that city for nearly forty years, and who has been reporter for the American, News and other city papers from Annapolis during the sessions of the Legislature for more than thirty years, was received at this office Tuesday morning. Mr. Winchester a few years ago contributed regularly to The Republican. His articles were always full of interest and his opinions were without exception based upon facts. He is a keen observer and one whose judgment is relied upon.

Mr. Winchester's letter is as follows:

BALTIMORE, Aug. 31, 1917.

DEAR MR. SINCELL.—It is a long time since I have written anything for THE REPUBLICAN, but you will remember that for several years I was a frequent contributor, especially in the way of news from Annapolis during sessions of the legislature. I hope, therefore, that you will publish this letter, and, if you wish it, I may be able to send you more from time to time.

I wish to say a few words in behalf of the nomination and election of my friend, Senator Speicher, whom I understood is a candidate for place which he has so ably and worthily filled for the past eight years. As you know I have been present at every session of the General Assembly for a long period of years, to be exact at every session since 1882, now thirty-five years. I have known intimately all the Senators from Garrett during that time, and not one of them has been a more conscientious, skilful and untiring worker for his constituents than Mr. Speicher. He has possibly made a mistake now and then, but they have been very few in number. He has had the esteem and respect of all his colleagues regardless of party, and has done his duty faithfully and well, and without fear or favor. He is held in the highest regard by all the newspaper correspondents, and all are anxious to see him returned to the State House for another four years. His usefulness in the future, gained from his long experience, will add greatly to the work of his party and his constituents in real effectiveness. Should the Republicans control the next Senate, Mr. Speicher will probably be the President of that body, and thus add additional honor to his county. To turn him down would be politicaly and otherwise, a great mistake.

Very sincerely yours,

PAUL WINCHESTER.

A Note of Appreciation from Mr. Weimer.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Your issue of last week contained a communication from "A Voter" in my behalf as candidate for nomination for House of Delegates and I want to publicly express my appreciation of his support and assure him as well as all other voters of the county that I would despise myself if I did not exert all my energy to live up to his high estimate of me, and I hereby pledge that if nominated and elected I will endeavor to be a real servant of the people and employ every resource at my command to promote the welfare of Garrett county and the State of Maryland.

Now I want to say just this much to the Republican voters of the county. If you believe I am safe and sane and straight and able to represent you, vote for me.

Yours truly,

E. A. WEIMER.

—Advertisement published by authority of the candidate.

To The Voters of Garrett County.

It has been my desire to personally see every Republican voter in the county before primary day. I regret that I have found this impossible because of lack of time.

At the close of the campaign I wish again to solicit, in this manner, the support and influence of all my friends throughout the county, as also those whose acquaintance I have not had the pleasure of making.

If nominated and elected, I pledge myself to work for constructive legislation and to do all I can for the best interests of the county and the citizens thereof.

Yours very truly,

ALBERT T. WHITE.

Republican Candidate for Nomination for House of Delegates.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

County Meeting at Accident September 20th and 21st.

The Annual Convention of the Garrett County Sunday School Association will be held at the Lutheran church in Accident on the 20th and 21st of September, and it is the expectation of the State and county leaders that there will be a large attendance at all of the sessions.

The convention will open in the afternoon of the 20th and close with a night session on the 21st. A strong program on which many of the county and State leaders in church and Sunday school work in the county will find it well worth their time to attend all of the sessions.

The attention of Sunday school superintendents is especially called to the necessity for early action in the election of Delegates and the forwarding of reports to the County Secretary, Mr. A. T. White, Mt. Lake Park, Md. A number of blanks for reports have been sent by the secretary to the District secretaries named below and superintendents are requested either to communicate with them and secure the blanks or else to communicate with the County Secretary at once regarding the same. Superintendents should also hold the election of delegates at an early date and forward the list of the same to Mr. J. L. Englehart, Accident, Md., not later than the 15th of September, stating how long they will be in attendance and if accommodations are desired. Threedelegates should be elected by each Sunday school. It is hoped, however, that the attendance at the convention will not be limited to the regularly accredited delegates but that all interested in this work will make it a point to attend. District secretaries are requested, if they have not already done so, to forward to the County secretary a full list of the Sunday schools, together with the name of the superintendents of the same, in their respective districts.

The following are district secretaries:
District No. 1 W. P. Good, Swanton.
District No. 2 C. V. Guard, Friendsville.
District No. 4 George Warnick, Bloomington.

District No. 6 Howard Brenneman, McHenry.

District No. 11 C. O. White, Jennings
District No. 12 B. H. Wiley, Bittinger.

THE GOD OF THE YOUNGER GENERATION

In his latest novel, Mr. H. G. Wells—that incisive saver of so many true things—has this word: "The last act of faith is to trust those we love to God * * *"

How true this is! How often our parent instinct betrays us! How hard it is to realize that after a time we are no longer our offspring's keepers and they are no longer our wards; they have grown to be individuals, souls, freemen of the earth, even as we are.

We would shield them from the storm. We would shield them from the hazardous path of doubt—we who have won every atom of our faith in wrestlings with doubt. We would keep them out of temptation—we who have won the right to call our virtue Virtue because we have met temptation face to face and tried our fortunes with it. We would keep them from want—we who know what it is to begin very low on the ladder, we who know that poverty is a kindly friend when we ourselves are not sordid. Ah, and we would keep their bodies safe, just as we used to keep their baby limbs safe and shield them from every danger—we who extol courage and bravery, and sing hymns to sacrifice, and name reverently the men who thought that life was not too great a price to pay for principle.

Yes, we believe in God—but if it is all the same to Him, we would prefer to be our children's guardian. We would have them safe at home with us, rather than on the seas with God. Is it not so? We know it to be so; you know it to be so. The parent is jealous even of God where the child is concerded.

We believe in God. We believe in as much of God as we can—and sometimes that portion of God we claim, though any portion is very great, is small when compared with the wholeness of God.

Did you ever think of the God you believe in? Think of your favorite name for Him. "God of our fathers," is it not?—a dear name, betokening the faithfulness of God through the generations of the past the God of Abraham and Moses and Isaiah; the God of Jesus, Paul and Peter; the God of Washington and Lincoln—"God of our fathers."

Our faith in God's guidance in the past is very clear, for we can see the past. Yes, we say to ourselves, the Eternal One did well in the past with such material as men allowed Him to have.

And our faith in His continuity is very clear—"the same yesterday, today and forever." "Forever" is a long, long word. We would we might substitute for it something within the reach of our own minds "the same yesterday, today, tomorrow, through the years of this war, through the generations of peace that are to follow."

And thus make the God of our fathers, and our God, the God of our children too.

"God of our fathers be the God and of our succeeding race.

We are now at a time of strong testing of our faith. It is not a call to commit our souls to God, nor our life, nor our means of living, nor any of those things which we have always felt able to trust to the Almighty Source of Wisdom and Mercy. It is a call to trust those who are dearer to us than ourselves, for whom all our anxiety has been given and all our labor spent.

And the test is sore because we haven't thought much of the future of the race with reference to God. Thinking of the future, we have confined ourselves to the thought of our own adventuring in the spiritual realm after we have passed out of the grammar school of earth-life. But there are two futures—our own elsewhere; our children's here. God is not through when we pass on, nor is the earth. The generations of men will continue until the end, and God will strive with men to get His will done in the earth, that this beautiful planet with all its possibilities of felicity may be brought to the condition in which it was meant to be. God loved the world—this world with its forests and seas, with its babes and birds, with its loves and its marriages, with its mornings and its sunsets, with its strong maturity of men and its old age which was meant to be beautiful—God loved it, and will have it back yet when the hierarchy of evil is at last destroyed.

We sadly need this faith just now—how sadly most of us need it. And it isn't an American need alone. Mothers and fathers all over the world have had to seek it. We think of the parents of Italy and France, of Germany and England and Scotland, of Ireland and Austria and Russia, of Canada and Belgium and the islands of the seas; we think of them in their extremity and what they have had to do, what faith they have had to make. True, another thought crosses that; if we, the Parents of the World, had but known how insidiously the rulers of spiritual darkness had been plotting against God's order for the world, we might have been more active in our opposition to it. But now they face it in their children, and the last act of faith is to believe that God is the God of the younger generation, and that, committed to Him that generation may yet rescue the world. If we could have a Congress of the Parents of the World today, we think we should see the powers of evil whipped before nightfall. Let us be plain about it: our sons are redressing our failure. It may be the hard school in which they shall learn to avoid our failure in the future.

For God shall be with them. Many of the parents will be faring farther, learning other worlds; but God and the young shall still wrestle together against the serpent for the redemption of the earth. We sometimes have a feeling, as we see our young men arraying themselves for the fight, that maybe we have ceased to be God's hope and that He has transferred it to them. If so be their state is glorious, for He who goes with them has brought the world from primeval darkness to its present light and power—and with them as His men and Himself as their Captain a decisive defeat may be impending for at least one form of evil in the world.

FOR THE SECOND LIBERTY LOAN

Money from the bonds of the second liberty loan of 1917 must be on its way to the United States Treasury by November 1. To make certain funds are on their way at that date, Secretry McAdoo Friday fixed October 1 as the latest possible starting date for the new liberty loan campaign.

Work will begin as soon as Congress has passed the $11,538,000,000 bond and certificate bill, to be reported in the House today. The Treasury Department, in the hope that the legislation may be enacted before October 1, is already preparing for the campaign. Secretary McAdoo yesterday urged all liberty loan committees to get ready, and asked for the formation of new committees wherever possible.

The amount, the interest rate, the denominations of the bonds and other details will be announced after Congress disposes of the pending bond bill. Indications are that the next offering will approximate $3,000,000.

Whether it will be advertised by the government through paid newspaper space is under consideration, but Secretary McAdoo said last night the cost of such an undertaking would exceed the appropriation now available for the purpose.

He added that there could be no action until more light had been received as to the cost of an effective advertising campaign and until Congress had decided what amount will be allowed for advertising for future issues.

Under the war revenue bill passed last April $7,000,000 was made available for expenses of floating $5,000,000,000 in bonds and $2,000,000,000 in short-time certificates of indebtedness. It is reported that about half already has been disbursed in connection with the flotation of the $2,000,000,000 liberty bonds first offered and the certificates of indebtedness put out in advance of the loan.

In announcing the tentative program for the second campaign Mr. McAdoo appealed to liberty loan committees to perfect organizations and prepare for the next campaign by getting in touch with the various Federal reserve banks.

The Secretary's statement regarding newspaper advertising, said:

"There seems to be an impression that the Treasury Department in the first liberty loan campaign applied for free advertising, or paid for advertising in some papers and not in others. That is entirely erroneous. The Treasury Department did not ask newspaper publishers for free advertising because I realize that the newspaper" only profitable commodity is advertising space and that there are many papers which are not able to give free advertising, especially in view of the high cost of printing paper.

"Newspapers and press associations loyally co-operated with the government in the first liberty loan. News and editorial columns were devoted most generously to the issue. They carried its message into every home, and deserve great praise for their service of patriotism. The people of the country want to know the financial needs of the goverement and the details of the issues of bonds. That is news.

"This information was given to them in the most comprehensive form possible and the newspapers and press associations have the satisfaction of knowing that they contributed immeasurably to the success of the loan. Success could not have been accomplished without their aid and co-operation. I have no doubt that the government will have the same genuine support from them in their news and editorinl columns in connection with the second issue.

"The question of paid advertising presents a serious problem for the government. The value of such advertising can not be doubted, and if the operation could be governed by the same consideration as those which determine the action of private enterprise, it would be much simplified.

"A private enterprise may advertise in a selected number of mediums most useful for its purposes, and may control its expenditures for that purpose without any limitation except its own desires or ability to pay. If the government engages in such a campaign it must advertise in every newspaper and periodical in America without discrimination; all must have equal treatment, and should have equal treatment.

SENATOR SPEICHER'S RECORD

Assemblyman F. G. Fox Gives Some Facts Relative Thereto Which Cannot Be Successfully Contradicted.

To the Republicans of Garrett County.

It has always been my desire to be fair and honest in political matters, as well as in business. This being true I feel it my duty as your representative to give you the facts concerning the bond bill which was passed for Garrett county during the session of 1916.

AN AFFIDAVIT.

FRIENDSVILLE, MD., Aug. 13, 1917.

During the 1916 Session of the General Assembly of Maryland, Mr. Sliger and Mr. Harned, of Oakland, Md., came to Annapolis in the interest of a bond issue to build a high school building at Oakland.

I was present when Mr. Sliger took the matter up with Senator Speicher, and I heard the Senator tell Mr. Sliger that he absolutely would not put the bill through the Senate without a referendum giving the people of Garrett county a chance to vote on it. They came to Mr. Hayden, Shartzer and myself and asked us to pass the bill through the House as originally drawn, which Hayden and I agreed to do conditionally, Shartzer refusing to have anything to do with it. After the introduction of the bill Senator Speicher came to me and asked me to not report the bill out of the committee, of which I was chairman, without an amendment to the bill to give the people a right to vote on the bond issue, as a bond issue for Garrett county would in his judgment be very unpopular without refering it to the people. He also stated that if I did not amend it he would when it came to the Senate.

When the bill came up to its second reading and open to amendment I refused to report the bill out until the amendment was prepared. Mr. Hayden then had the amendment prepared by Senator Speicher and as soon as the amendment was placed in my hands and as chairman of the committee, I reported the bill out favorably with amendment, which was adopted. Shartzer had absolutely nothing to do with putting this amendment to the bill.

F. G. FOX.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of August, in the year of 1917.

A. H. RUSH, Notary Public.

My commission expires May 1, 1918.

I do not consider any man, no matter who he is or what office he may be a candidate for, entitled to the vote and confidence of the Republicans of Garrett county who makes his campaign by misrepresentations and false statements.

I have had the pleasure and honor to serve you in the House of Delegates for the past two years, and I have been a very close observer, and I can say without fear of successful contradiction that Senator Speicher had the confidence and respect of every colleague in the Senate. His word was his bond and was never questioned by any of his colleagues. This is more than I can say for the candidate who is opposing him.

The very fact that Senator Speicher was chosen floor leader of his party for the special session of 1917, against the protest of Baltimore City, should convince every Republican that his standing in the Senate entitles him to your vote and your support.

Garrett county for the past eight years has received more money from the state for roads than any county in the State of Maryland represented by a Republican. Another fact I wish to call your attention to: Garrett county has received thirty-two thousand dollars for our public schools.

Another fact I wish to call to your attention. That is in reference to the mining bills which you have heard so much about. When these bills were reported unfavorably by the committee Senator Speicher made a speech in behalf of the bills and voted to adopt the bills for the unfavorable report, which was carried and the bills were ordered engrossed for third reading and final passage. During the last night of the session while Senator Speicher was in conference with the Governor concerning the appointments for Garrett county these bills were called up out of their regular order on the calendar and lacked a constitutional majority. This is an absolute fact and cannot be successfully denied.

I wish to say in conclusion this is no time for personalities. Drop your personal differences, if you have any, and vote for the candidate who has done everything possible for the county; who is one among the heavy taxpayers of the county and one who has the confidence and respect of the people of the state; one who has the experience and will be in a better position in every way at this, the most trying and uncertain time in the history of our country, to serve us than ever before.

No man, no matter who he is, or to what position he may aspire, who makes false statements in circular form and with his confidential advisers scatters them secretly throughout the county, is not entitled to the confidence and votes of the citizens of Garrett county. The man who publishes one false statement, will he not publish more?

Picketing, Pro and Con

By Frederick J. Haskin.

Over fifty suffragette pickets have been arrested at the gates of the White House. Seventeen of them have served three day sentences in the District jail and twenty-two have been sent to the workhouse at Occoquan. Washington crowds have been provided with a new amusement, and a number of visitors have carried away bits of the suffrage banners as souvenirs.

Such is the record of American militancy to date. Its details have been set forth in the papers, but the motives back of it have been largely overlooked. The purpose of this article is to set forth the purpose and plan of the militant suffragettes who have been picketing the President, and also the views of those nonmilitant but equally earnest workers for the enfranchisement of women who regard picketing as a mistake.

The Congressional Union, which is working for woman suffrage but which is not in any way affiliated with the National American Woman Suffrage Association, is the organization which is doing the picketing. These women explain that they are doing it with a view to keeping before the President a constant reminder that in the United States of America there are twenty million citizens who cannot vote. Also, without picketing, they declare, the suffrage issue would be entirely submerged in the issue of war.

For a long time, they assert, they confined their activities to Congress. They worked laboriously to bring the Susan B. Anthony Amendment to a vote, believing that if a vote were taken the amendment could be put through. This they found they could not do without the help of the President. If the President would urge the passage of this amendment at any time, they declare, Congress would at least report the measure out of committee and get some action on it.

So the Congressional Union decided that the thing for them to do was to let Congress alone for awhile, and tackle the President.

In all, they have called upon the President seventeen times. The first time was at the beginning of Mr. Wilson's administration, and he protested that suffrage was a question of which he knew nothing. This statement left no room for argument, so the suffragettes went home and sent him all the suffrage literature they could find, so that he would know something about it. They waited for a reasonable length of time, and made a second call.

The second time the President received them cordially but explained that his hands were tied in regard to suffrage for the reasons that he was not the leader but the follower of his party, and that he had a deep conviction that suffrage must come state by state.

The suffragettes, however, were not discouraged. A few months later, they called again. The President pointed out as a difficulty the negro vote in the South. To this the women replied that there were two million more white women in the South than there were men, women and children of the colored race.

Soon after this it was announced that no more suffrage deputations would be received at the White House. After the tenth of January no suffragette was to be admitted.

"So our only means of keeping the suffrage question before the President—of reminding him that there were two million citizens who could not have a voice in the government—was to picket," a suffragette explained. The women consider that their arrest was most unjust. They were doing on the day of their arrest nothing different from what they had done every other day before since the first of the year. If they were blocking traffic then, they say, they were blocking it before.

Neither does the President's pardon inspire in them a sense of gratitude at all. If they really broke a law, they say, then they certainly deserve to be punished, and there is no more reason why the President should pardon them than any other law-breaker.

When asked what they had to say concerning the nation's indignant charge that they were worrying the President at a most inappropriate time, they said: "Our best reply to that is that the President himself has said that we do not worry him at all."

Incidentally, they claim that they have gained more members in their organization, more ardent advocates of suffrage in Congress and more money in the way of subscriptions since the picket riots began, than they gained in the two years before. They have a large force, more offices, more work, more excitement, and more reporters and cartoonists running in and out than ever before.

In sharp contrast, the headquarters of the National American Suffrage Association a little further up town is serene, conservative, almost austere. There are no curious crowds or suspicious policemen; the wide spacious corridors and reception rooms are grandly quiet, and the neat, cool offices are occupied only by a few studious workers.

You cannot imagine the National Woman Suffrage Association picketing, and they have hastened to repudiate all part in it from the very beginning, any such demonstration being strictly against their policy. In fact, it was just over this very policy that the association and the Congressional Union quarreled at the beginning of the Wilson administration. The Congressional Union at that time was merely the congressional committee of the association—the committee which pushed suffrage in Congress. Miss Alice Paul and Miss Lucy Burns, who were the heads of the committee, had worked with Mrs. Pankhurst in Great Britain, and were therefore militants, although they did not think that violence would ever have to be used in this country. They did believe, however, in fighting the party in power.

The party in power at the time of the break was the Democratic party. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the head of the National Woman Suffrage Association, believed that nothing could be gained by such tactics and refused to yield the point to the other two women. So the two women formed a separate organization—they bolted. Now the argument of the national association is this:

They do not believe that the President is any obstacle to suffrage. They think that Congress is. They know that in order to get their amendment passed two-thirds of Congress will have to vote for it, and they know that no one party has held a two-thirds majority for years. Hence the Democratic party cannot even if it wanted to pass the suffrage amendment, but it can, of course defeat it.

The trouble, they contend, is this: Suffrage has become such a big national issue that neither party wants the other to get the credit of passing the amendment. The Republicans, in other words, do not want the Democrats to pass it, and the Democrats do not want the Republicans to do so. Thus the association believes that its only chance to get the amendment through is to make it a nonpartisan issue—to persuade Republicans and Democrats to forget their parties, as they have in the recent war legislation, and vote for it simply as a national question.

"So," they assert, "nothing can be gained by attacking the President."

Russia, Great Britian and Canada have given the ballot to their women; France has promised it as one of the first after-war measures, and even Italy and Prussia, who heretofore have had nothing to say on woman suffrage, have hinted that they are going to enfranchise their women. Under these circumstances, says the national association, the United States of America—supposed to be the greatest democracy in the world—cannot afford to hold out much longer.

Thus the two organizations, both working for suffrage but with highly different views as to the way it should be worked, do not enjoy very cordial relations. One thinks that it is a party question under the absolute control of the President; the other thinks that it is a non-partisan question under the absolute control of Congress.

SECOND DEGREE VERDICT; MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

Judge Reynolds, in Weisengoff Case, Withholds Decision.

The jury in the case of Peter Weisengoff, saloonkeeper of Westernport, Md., accused of the murder of Sheriff Donald P. Davis, of Mineral county, West Virginia, on June 27, at 6 o'clock Friday evening brought in a verdict of murder in the second degree in the Keyser circuit court. The jury deliberated an hour and twenty minutes.

A motion for a new trial was filed with Judge Reynolds who said he would take it up at a special term of court, following the adjournment of court in Tucker county, over which he will preside. In the meantime Weisengoff will remain in jail.

The penalty is from five to 18 years in the penintentiary.

Weisengoff's wife, who sat by his side during the trial, which lasted five days, became hysterical when the forman of the jury announced the verdict. She shouted and rushed for the jury trying between sobs to plead with them. Weisengoff supported her in his powerful arms and without a trace of emotion himself quited his wife. His attorneys immediately entered a motion for a new trial.

Sheriff Davis attempted to arrest Weisengoff, who was accused of violating the liquor laws of West Virginia. Davis jumped on the running board of Weisengoff's automobile, and the latter made a dash for liberty across the West Virginia line into Maryland. As the machine neared the bridge connecting Piedmont with Westernport, the two states, it crashed into an iron support, killing Sheriff Davis and injuring four of Weisengoff's children, who were in the car.

It is likely the case will find its way to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. The attorneys for the defendant reserved exceptions to rulings during the trial. The verdict is received with various degrees of opinion. It is looked upon as a compromise on the part of the jury.

MARKETING THE HONEY CROP

College Park, Aug. 16.—The marketing of any product is a problem entirely aside from the business of production. So involved has this problem become that all large business concerns recognize the necessity of employing experts to place their products where they will sell the most readily and secure the most profitable return.

Individual producers have paid too little attention to this important phase of their business. Beekeepers in particular seldom realize the necessity of doing more than produce honey which may be disposed of as quickly as possible to the highest bidder. Producing honey is only one-half the game. If the other half is neglected the results are only fifty per cent.

Efficient marketing concerns itself with four distinct problems; the production of a standard article, maintaining a constant supply, regulating distribution, and consistent advertising. It may be argued that these are problems for the commission men, wholesalers, and corporate concerns; that the individual producer will find it unprofitable or inadvisable to both market and produce. Nevertheless, the difference in returns will usually more than repay for the effort required to market properly.

Broadly speaking there are two distinct markets for honey; the local market, and the wholesale market. Few beekeepers in Maryland sell at wholesale, most of the honey being disposed of in the immediate neighborhood. However, contrary to the prevailing idea, the market principles mentioned are most important where local selling is practiced.

Nothing is more discouraging to the honey business than the yearly dumping of the entire crop on local markets, in any kind of a package, with little or no advertising, and at ridiculously variable prices. Beekeeping will never become a business until every beekeeper realizes the importance of proper marketing.

It is essential that each producer develop a standard, neatly labeled and attractive package both for comb and extracted honey. This package once secured should remain unchanged from year to year and be kept constantly before the public by consistent advertising in the papers, in the store windows, by road side signs, posters, etc.

It is ruinous to dispose of all the honey at once as the best of trades will soon die if its demands are not constantly filled. As the market expands and the competition becomes keener it may be best to dispose of the product that crowded and oversupplied markets may be avoided. Underselling is never safe and should be avoided. It results in artificially lowering the local market. Beekeepers should guide themselves by the general market. They will find the honey market reports issued by the Department of Markets a great aid in determining prices. These reports may be secured free by application to the Office of Markets United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Maryland beekeepers should realize also that comb honey of a fine grade is not easily produced in the State and that because of this fact and the tremendous demand for liquid honey on the general market the production of extracted honey is the best business proposition.

WHEN THE HENS MOULT.

College Park, Aug. 16.—That proper care and feeding of hens during the moulting season is of utmost importance is being pointed out by Roy H. Waite, Poultryman of the Agricultural Experiment Station. He says:

"Take good care of your hens during the moult if you wish them to produce eggs for you later in the season. The moulting produces quite a jolt to hens. This is shown by their nervous condition at the time of moulting and by their dropping off laying. Naturally birds moult a few feathers at a time, but this has all been changed in the domestic fowl which moults in a comparatively short time. Some of the best laying hens seem to drop their feathers all at once.

"During the moult hens do not require as much energy, heat and fat forming feeds as they do when laying but they do need more tissue building feeds. Linseed meal furnishes just the kind of nourishment needed to produce feathers. Add about 10 per cent. of linseed meal to the mash during the moulting period. Sunflower seeds are just as good. If you have them feed a liberal amount. Be careful to not overfeed hens that have just come through the moult, as there is a tendency for them to become overfat.

"Keep them active and working and soon they will get back to laying, if they are the laying kind."

There are more than 1,100 boys enrolled in the Club contests in Maryland, and their activities cover the growing to corn, tobacco, potatoes, pigs and poultry. Potatoes will be the first of the crops harvested and in spite of the rainy weather having caused some delay in getting the crop planted, a very large number of boys will be in the competition. There are many instances of where the boys are outstripping their fathers in the production of different crops.

As a nucleus we have purchased the goodwill and assets of the Tri-State Business College. This student body is now working under our direction. Our Day School is in session now. The Fall Term will begin Tuesday, September 4. Our Night School will open Monday, September 10.

We are offering courses leading to Stenographic, Secretarial, Bookkeeping, Clerical and Civil Service positions.

Philadelphia, Pa.
June 20, 1917.

To Whom It May Concern:

As President of Strayer's Business College, Incorporated, Baltimore, Maryland, I employed Mr. Charles S. Catherman as a teacher for that institution about fifteen years ago. Mr. Catherman came to us very highly recommended and he fulfilled all of our expectations.

The fact that Mr. Catherman remained with Strayer's Business College, Baltimore, for fifteen years, rising from his first position to that of head of the Commercial Department then to Superintendent of instruction, ane afterwards to acting Manager of the instution, speaks more eloquently of the high esteem in which he was held than any words that I could indite.

I understand that it is now the purpose of Mr. Catherman to engage in the school business on his own account and I take pleasure in commending him to the favorable consideration of the people in any community in which he may locate.

Mr. Catherman's education and experience fit him to render superior service along the line of Commercial education to any persons who may favor him with their patronage and my knowledge of him as a man leads me to believe that no effort on his part will be spared to give his patrons the very best business training possible for them to procure.

To The Voters of Garrett County.

Information has reached me that just a few days before the Primary Election there would be a circular distributed throughout the County making an attack upon me for the purpose of attempting to defeat me in securing the nomination for the office which I now hold, namely, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county.

I have not been informed of the contents of this circular and therefore am unable to refute the same and defend myself from the injury which it is calculated to do me, but I take this opportunity of saying to you that both my private and public life has always been open to you. The books and records of my office are free to the inspection of the public and I have done nothing which I have any desire to conceal. I have served you long and faithfully to the very best of my ability, and am perfectly willing to leave it to the voters of Garrett county to say by their ballots to be cast at the Primary Election to be held on Tuesday, September 11th, 1917, whether my official character has been such as will justify them in voting for my retention in the office.

A Statement From Mr. Philip T. Peddicord.

Oakland, Md., September 5th, 1917.

Being informed that a report is being circulated to the effect that if my father, Mr. J. C. Peddicord, should be elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, that I am to be his deputy.

This report is circulated for the sole purpose of injuring my father's chance for the nomination, for there is not a word of truth in it.

I held the position of Deputy Clerk under Mr. E. Z. Tower for six years and voluntarily resigned the same, and I am now employed under the State Tax Commission, where I expect to remain.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett County.

I desire to say that it is not convenient for me to make a personal canvass of the county, therefore I adopt this method of informing our people that my past experience in the legislature will be at your service.

If elected I may be the only old soldier in the House of Delegates and my army experience of nearly four years would qualify me to be of service in the passage of laws to safeguard the interest of our boys from Garrett county in the present great war.

I think I may confidently count upon the support of my Republican friends generally and especially my old soldier comrades in arms, their sons and grandsons.

Yours for service,

JAS. A. HAYDEN.

I have visited every district during the past few weeks and expect to make another visit to the several communities prior to the election, but it will be impossible for me to see personally every voter owing to the lack of time.

If nominated and elected to the office of Sheriff I will endeavor to give the office my best attention and to discharge the duties incumbent upon me without fear or favor.

Soliciting the votes of the Republicans throughout the county, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

LAW TO DRAFT MILLION ALIENS

Passed By the Senate at Washington Yesterday.

Taking the situation into its own hands the Senate yesterday passed a bill making mandatory the drafting of what are said to be more than a million slackers in this country.

Some weeks ago the Senate passed a resolution directing the President to enter into diplomatic negotiations to gather in these slackers. This diplomatic channel was declared to be the policy of the administration, rather than the more drastic procedure. But certain senators said today they "were tired of waiting for the state department to act and that diplomacy was too slow."

No intimation was given that the bill would be called up. It met with little opposition when the viva voce vote was taken.

The Senate bill, of which Chamberlain of Oregon, chairman of the military affairs' committee, is the author, was altered in one important particular. It now provides that while Germans and other aliens of the central powers, such as Austrians, Turks and Bulgarians, cannot be made to fight; they can be drafted and "utilized for other necessary purposes during the present stringency." This means they can be used on road work, farms, etc. Chinese, Japanese and others, whose treaties provide they shall not be subject here to military duty, are exempted from the bill.

As passed the bill provides:

1. That all aliens here more than a year and who have not declared their intentions to become citizens are subject to draft.

2. That they shall be exempt if their treaties so stipulate, their diplomatic representatives here may waive this. In this case they are given ninety days to leave the country.

3. That the President can draft alien enemies for non-military purposes.

4. That those who have declared their intention to become citizens can enlist for American service.

5. That Americans in foreign armies shall not lose their citizenship.

6. That states where the large population of aliens affected the draft quota shall in future be given credit for these aliens.

FROST DAMAGE WILL BE LARGE

Mercury Tuesday Morning Reached the Freezing Point.

Tuesday morning the entire eastern section of the county, extending from a point low down in eastern Virginia to the lakes, was visited by a heavy freeze which has resulted in damage to crops estimated away up in the millions.

Garrett county did not escape entirely. Her corn crop, just maturing, as well as hundreds of acres of buckwheat, were caught, and the loss will be felt by all. Farmers on Tuesday morning got to work early and with as many men as it was possible to procure, cut the corn and started the work of putting it into silos for feeding this winter.

Water Becoming Scarce.

The wells from which the supply of water for the town is drawn, are becoming very low and in order to conserve the supply and fill the reservoir, it has been deemed expedient by the water board to turn the water off at 11.30 each night and turn it on again at 5.30 in the morning, which is being done with the result that an appreciable gain is being noticed.

Mr. Arnold Thanks the Voters.

I hereby thank all those who helped me in any way at the primary.

F. P. ARNOLD.

SENATOR SPEICHER IS THE NOMINEE

In a Hot Contest He Won by 253 Over His Opponent—White, Weimer and Selby for House

The primary election is over and the Republicans can heartily support the entire ticket nominated, for upon it will be found the names of those who will prove themselves true to their promises.

For the Senate the present incumbent, Hon. Harvey J. Speicher, won by a majority of 253 over his opponent, carrying eleven of the districts by good majorities.

The House of Delegates ticket will be composed of two former members of that body, Messrs. Edwin Arthur Weimer, of Oakland, and Mr. Nathan R. Selby, of Selbysport; and Mr. Albert T. White, an excellent representative of the best interests of the people who hails from Loch Lynn Heights.

The Commissioners ticket is composed of two of the best business men in the county. Mr. George D. Browning, of District No. 2, who has been a successful farmer and mill operator for years, is one of the candidates and has as his running mate Mr. Henry P. Miller, manager of the Stone House farm located in District No. 3 along the National pike.

That old war horse of Republicanism, Mr. George D. White, who has had his eye upon the Sheriff's office many years, is the successful candidate for the nomination.

Mr. John W. Kimmell, the present efficient County Treasurer, has been renominated and will bring to the office the experience he has gathered during the past two years.

Mr. Edward Z. Tower, of Oakland, and who does not know him for the many kind acts he has done, earned his renomination and was successful with more than twelve hundred votes to spare.

The Republican committee is composed of Messrs. D. E. Bolden, Charles A. Ashby, J. B. Emory and David O. DeWitt.

The Democratic Committee elected on Tuesday will be Messrs. Harry A. Rasche, Sylvanus K. Schlossnagel and William T. Stanton.

What We Know.

The Bible is the most wonderful of books. It contains subjects so deep that the wisdom of man cannot fathom fully comprehend them; and with all the learning of the ripest scholars they are unable to fathom its mysteries or to speak positively as to the precise meaning of some of these scriptures: In the Revelation for example, future events are foreshadowed in such language and are symbolized by such peculiar figures that we are mystified but consecrated Christian scholarship has been able to unlock the door of this mysterious chamber. Many enigmas are there which cannot be satisfactorily solved at least to all. The same is true in regard to God's providential economy and its deep purposes in certain things. We see His acts of mercy and of judgment and we are compelled to bow our heads in reverence before Him "who doeth His will in the armies of heaven, and none dare say why doest thou so." In humanity we fall before Him, constrained to admit that now we see through a glass darkly, and our finite minds cannot comprehend the ways of the Almighty nor sound the deep things of God. However it is a comfort to know that these mysteries are not connected with the things essential to our salvation. The plan is clearly revealed; the way is so plain that the wayfaring may not err and he may run that readeth it." The glorious truths essential for the salvation of men or for the edification of saints, are not enveloped in mystery. All is clear in this field—clear as the sun in its noon day splendor. The way to the city of refuge is kept clear, marks show the way so that the stricken soul may not mistake the way. The way to the celestial city is marked by so many clear and striking passages that only those who are willfully stubborn fail to keep the road.

Some things we cannot know so long as we are in the flesh—only the light of eternity can reveal it, but that we may count some of the certainties and be thankful for them, let us notice some of the things we may affirm on the authority of the Bible that we know. Some things are so clearly revealed and so emphatically asserted in the word of God that we cannot fail to comprehend them. The Apostle John says we know that the son of God is come and hath given us an understanding that we may know Him that is true." He is giving a recapitulation of the privileges and advantages of true believers. They are secured against the dominion of sin, or the fulness of its guilt; they are fortified against the destructive attempts of the devil; they have a knowledge of the true and eternal God. The world is fallen in sin, it is full of iniquity. The Son of man came. We know that. He was seen, felt and heard. We know Him by the evidence He has given. Miracles, well they are a fact, though they have been bitterly assailed and vehemently denied.

He has given internal light in our understanding whereby we may discern the glories of the true God. He made all things. How else can they be accounted for. He led Israel out of Egypt with a high hand and by mighty power. He made a covenant with our fathers and kept it to the letter. He promised to call the Gentiles and in due time he did it and we are to enjoy the blessings of his covenant. His terrors and judgments declare him to be the true God, and who can fail to be impressed with the fact that fearful terrors and awful judgments are abroad in the land.

We know Him to be the true God by His love and Grace, by his counsel and works. We may be united to Him by so simple a thing as faith. How may we know we are? By experience, by our changed lives, by the indwelling and witness of the spirit. That is a happy union. It is like that of the vine and branches. The Son leads us to the Father and we are in both. We are there in covenant and federal alliance with both. We are joined to both the Father and the Son, by the operation of the Holy Spirit and as the Son is God himself, the true God and eternal life. We are united to the true God and have eternal life. The object of Christ's coming was to save and we know he has saved many, is saving many now. The Father sent Him not only for this, but ordained Him to be the illuminator of his people. For this reason He has given us an understanding that we may know Him that is true. Jesus is therefore revealed to us in the clearest terms. The word is before us and from it we may gather precious fruits of knowledge. But we have not only this knowledge of Christ, we know Him personally, because He dwells in us and abides with us. We know Him as the true one. We know that the whole world lieth in sin and that this one sent from God is the only saviour from sin. In this life we are surrounded by much that is untrue and all is uncertain but it is full of comfort to know Him, that is true.

Mountains shall fall, hills shall vanish, the earth shall melt, the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, but His kingdom will never depart from us nor his covenant of peace be removed. He who is the same yesterday, today and forever is immutable, and we are as the Apostle says, in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ. This being true He dwells in us and is therefore our life.

JOANNES.

The Four-Minute Men . . . By Frederick J. Haskin.

A new war organization, known as the Four-Minute Speakers has recently been formed under the auspices of the government for the purpose of arousing patriotism throughout the country.

Four-Minute Men, like the Minute Men of '76, are patriots organized to meet an emergency, but they are disciples of Patrick Henry rather than Ethan Allen. Their task is to arouse interest in the war by making speeches about it speeches strictly limited, confined and restricted to four minutes.

Maybe you consider that a simple task? Well, it seems that it isn't. The organization has had the greatest difficulty in procuring men who could make a speech in four minutes. Many men who are splendid speakers, if they have plenty of time in which to tell stories and get up steam, cannot make good on a four-minute speech at all. And yet the four-minute feature is absolutely essential to the success of the organization.

For the Four-Minute Men speak in moving picture theatres. At the end of the big feature, an American flag is thrown on the screen to attract the audience. Immediately follows a large-lettered announcement that Mr. So-and-So "will speak for four minutes on a subject of national importance. He speaks under the authority of the Committee on Public Information, Washington, D. C." This saves time in introductions, which the organization dislikes for the reason that the introducer is always tempted to make a speech himself that is apt to string itself out and tire the audience. And the audience must not be tired. That is the basic principle of the four-minute idea.

So strict are the Four-Minute Men regarding this principle that a visiting committee, appointed by the organization, visits the moving picture theatres and times the speakers. If a man allows his speech to run one second over four minutes he is severely called down by the visiting committee. And, if on a second occasion, he repeats the offense, he is asked for his resignation. The visiting committee is not lenient in this matter. It is made up of deposed speakers.

As a further check upon the time in which a Four-Minute Man speaks the organization has enlisted the aid of the moving picture theatre managers, too. If at the end of four minutes a man goes on speaking they are requested to stop him either by ringing a bell, blowing a horn or, as one member said, shooting him if necessary.

The four-minute idea is the most up-to-date adaptation of that ancient principle to the effect that people will listen to anything just so long as you don't tire them. Men in public life have long practiced self-denial in the matter of words in order to "put over" their propaganda more effectively. Politicians—that is, successful politicians—always make short speeches; ministers are continually diminishing the size of their sermons, and some lawyers have recognized the value of few words. In confining their speeches to that four-minute period between the change of films in the moving picture shows, the Four-Minute Men have not only succeeded in holding the complete attention of their audience—they have actually made those audiences applaud for encores.

This, of course, means that the Four-Minute Men are really most excellent speakers. They come from all walks of life. The organization will accept anybody from a policeman to a Cabinet officer just as long as he can make a good speech. Mr. McAdoo and Mr. Lane are both Four-Minute Men, although in view of their present heavy duties they will doubtless be infrequent speakers. In Washington the chairman of the local committee of Four-Minute Men is Ira N. Bennett, a lawyer, and the other forty or more speakers who make up the rest of the committee are mechanics and professional men, government clerks and enlisted men, the two Cabinet officers already mentioned, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Byron S. Newton, and the Treasurer of the United States, John Burke.

The speeches of the Four-Minute Men are confined exclusively to the war. Each moving picture theatre on the list gets two speakers a week. The first night the subject is the "Need of Food Conservation"; the second night it is "Why We are Fighting" and the next week another speaker gives a four-minute talk on "What our enemy really is—the German government rather than the German people." In this way all the facts about the war are presented to moving picture audiences by different speakers who keep the interest of the people by ceasing to talk just as they are about to lose it.

The subjects of the speeches are given out each week by the national headquarters at Washington, which mails the date, as well as a sample speech, to every Four-Minute Man throughout the country. He can either use the sample speech or invent one of his own from the information given, with the assistance of the outline mapped out for him. Here is the outline of the speech entitled; "What Our Enemy Really Is:"

I. We must understand that the German system of government is the opposite of democracy.

II. We must realize that a German victory would mean the downfall of democracy throughout the world.

III. We must appreciate the military strength of Germany and make our preparations accordingly.

IV. We must unmask pro-Greman arguments that pretend to be American sentiment and which deceive many well-intentioned Americans.

V. We must develop American sentiment in harmony with America's purposes.

From this outline the Four-Minute Man makes his speech, which is usually from five hundred to seven hundred words long. It usually starts something like this: "Ladies and Gentlemen: The time has come when the American people should know in this war who their real enemy is and what we are up against in a struggle which will determine the whole future of this country. By the courtesy of the management of this theatre I am going to talk with you a few minutes on that subject."

The last sentence of this paragraph, by the way, needs a few works of explanation. The moving picture theatres are cooperating with the Four-Minute Men in every way possible. They offer their theatres and their audiences to the Four-Minute Men free of charge, simply to show that they are patriotic citizens anxious to further the cause of the war as far as they are able. Very few movie men have refused the courtesy, althought perhaps those few are to be excused on the grounds that they have suffered from the effects of former generosity.

When the Liberty Loan was being floated, moving picture men offered their theatres to government campaigners who had not been imbued with the four-minute idea. They made long speeches to the people in their zeal for inspiring subscriptions, and as a result the people yawned, fidgeted and finally made their escape never to return. It was the Red Cross campaigners who first discovered the efficacy of being brief. One of them had heard the story concerning the late Samuel Clemens, who upon going to church was so pleased with the minister's sermon that he put a five dollar bill in the collection plate. The sermon went on, and Mr. Clemens began to regret his hasty act. It was still going on when the collection plate passed him the second time, at which Mr. Clemens is said to have reached out and taken his five dollar bill back.

SOIL BUILDING.

Improve the Condition by Lime and Properly Inoculated Green Manure Crops.

GOOD TILTH IS INVALUABLE.

Application of Lime Upon Heavy Soils Makes Them Less Sticky, More Easily Cultivated, More Porous—Green Manure Crops Are of Inestimable Value as Substitutes For Farmyard Manure, of Which a Scarcity Exists.

Good tilth is an expression often used by farmers and experiment station workers. In a general way the farmer means a soil which is easily worked, one which is mellow, friable and falls into fine particles when plowed or cultivated. The experiment station worker agrees with the farmer and adds that it must contain plant food, lime and humus.

A condition of soil like the one shown in photograph No. 1 is a proposition hard to handle. How can a plant be expected to grow on a soil like that, and what are the labor charges?

When a large rock in a field cannot be removed by the pick, a shovel and a crowbar the farmer uses a stick of dynamite. A lumpy soil can be worked into condition with the roller and harrow, but why spend so much energy when an application of lime will help do the trick and aid in other ways at the same time? Applications of lime upon heavy soils make them less sticky, more crumbly, more friable, more easily cultivated, and water passes through them more rapidly as the result of increased porosity.

Green Manures Increase Supply of Humus.

Quite as important in bringing a soil up in tilth is the matter of organic matter, which in a state of decomposition gives rise to humus. There is no better way to build up a soil in humus than by adding farmyard manure, because it contains, besides plant food, innumerable bacteria. Unfortunately there is not enough manure to go around in these days of intensive farming and automobiles. There are two groups of green manure crops, known as "nitrogen gatherers" and "nitrogen consumers," or leguminous crops on the one hand and non-leguminous crops on the other. It is easily understood then that a crop of the first, the "nitrogen gathering" group, is most beneficial. There are many crops of this group which may be used. For summer soy beans and cowpeas, as shown in photographs Nos. 2 and 3, are of inestimable value for turning under, especially in warm climates where hot summers prevail, and likewise crimson clover and hairy or winter vetch are suitable for winter use if care is taken to plant them early so that a good start is made before winter.

Manure was stated to have a particular advantage because it added bacteria to the soil. Legumes have a particular advantage because certain bacteria work with them and take nitrogen from the air and store it in nodules on the roots of the plant. This nitrogen is shared by bacteria and plants alike, and when the crop is plowed under it is there to be incorporated in the soil with the organic matter furnished by the roots and tops of the plants.

Leguminous Crops Should Be Inoculated.

It so happens that each different leguminous plant works with a separate and specific bacterium and that these bacteria are not always present in the soil. When they are not present it is essential that they be added to the soil at planting time. This may be done in a number of ways. It used to be the custom to take soil from another field which had grown the same crop and shown evidences of bacteria by nodules on the roots of the plants and spread it on the new field on a dark day when the sun would not kill the bacteria, but today this method has been superseded almost entirely by the use of commercial cultures. In other words, the bacteria are isolated and placed in bottles full of gelatin for them to live on. Such cultures are inexpensive, and all the farmer has to do is to put the contents of the bottle on the seed in a manner described on each bottle.

Cultivation and Plant Food Are Just as Important.

Coming back to the question of tilth, lime and green manures are soil amendments. They are the most important factors in making a hard, lumpy soil, such as shown in the photograph, capable of good cultivation and crop production by mellowing the soil, increasing its water holding capacity and creating conditions favorable for the development of all kinds of beneficial bacteria, but it must be remembered that the best results are obtained only when proper methods of tillage and liberal amounts of plant food are used. It is true that lime is used as a food by some crops and that leguminous green manure crops when properly inoculated add nitrogen, but this does not mean that plant food is in the soil in sufficient quantity.

OYSTER SHELLS FOR THE FARM FLOCK

Chicks and Laying Hens Need Them to Supplement Grain and Forage Ration.

That oyster shells are important in poultry rations is shown very clearly in experiments conducted at the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell university. In these experiments the production of eggs was materially increased when oyster shells were used in conjunction with the regular Cornell ration, composed of the following: Cornmeal, 300 pounds; wheat middlings, 300 pounds; wheat bran, 150 pounds; alfalfa meal, 50 pounds; oilmeal, 50 pounds; meat scrap, 250 pounds; salt, 1 pound. Grit and charcoal were also furnished to the birds of this pen.

In tests somewhat similar, but with young birds, the New Jersey Experiment Station shows that oyster shells with meat and bone are far superior as sources of phosphoric acid and lime than other purely mineral substances used to supply the same ingredients. In these tests the mortality and gain in weight of the birds point out very clearly that lime and phosphoric acid are best supplied to growing chicks in the form of oyster shells and lime.

Generally speaking, oyster shells are invaluable to the poultryman and should be kept before the birds constantly in quantity and in a clean receptacle. Substitutes of various kinds have been tried, but nothing has been found to take the place of oyster shells.

LIME RAISES POTATO YIELDS.

It Will Not Increase Scab if Properly Applied Following Digging.

It is generally conceded among potato growers that lime should be used upon potato ground at least once in three or four years. Yields are increased, and the soil is kept in that fine, mellow condition which makes a deep soil possible, but unfortunately scab, a serious potato disease which lives in the soil is benefited by lime. Do not be misled by the idea that lime causes scab, because quite the opposite is true, but it does create a condition favorable to the development of the disease organisms in the soil.

There is therefore an advantage on the one side and a detriment on the other, and the question is how the beneficial results of liming may be obtained and the harmful effects avoided. This may be done with comparative success by applying the lime at the rate of about 1,000 pounds to the acre immediately after harvesting potatoes and before planting wheat or clover, or whatever the rotation requires. This allows a period of two or three years before potatoes are grown again on the same ground. During this interval the development of scab is undoubtedly checked by the acids of decay of organic matter furnished by the stubble of the intervening crops, so that little if any greater injury may be expected from the ravages of the disease.

Other crops grown in the rotation are materially benefited by lime, especially plants of the legume family, alfalfa, clovers and the like, and, furthermore, soils badly infested with wire worms and white grubs are ridded of these pests in a marked degree.

Cut Brush and Briers Out of the Parture Lot.

The value of pasture lands is not appreciated as it should be, and too many receive less attention than deserved. Every farm possesses what is known as the pasture lot. Some of the lots possess the finest character of soil, good drainage and good turfs, but are allowed to grow up into a field of briers and bushes with little care or attention which they are deserving of and for which they would pay handsome returns.

It is good practice to cut all briers and bushes during July, August and September. If they are not numerous they need not be carried off; if they are numerous they should be burned after they have dried. The point is to begin cutting them out every year before they become numerous, and then the work of each following year is small and the pasture area much increased.

The Protector of Finance

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

THE INVALID LOAN

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

I AWAITED the opening of a door in Resilius Marvel's private office with a good deal of interest. Upon that action hinged something important, and I knew it. Here was a place where small things counted—a strange room, a strange man its master; only the unusual happened here. Besides that, beyond the door of this, the headquarters office of the United Bankers' Protective association, there were strange sounds. They were impelling and then deterrent; a shrill cackle, more eerie than human, as of some hunted animal in mortal terror—a voice calling distressfully into the bleak stormy night, like that of a victim from the outer world being resistingly dragged over the threshold of a new and uncertain one.

To the inner circle of financial men given to good comradeship in exclusive club circles, the mention of the name of Resilius Marvel would bring a tender glow to heart and brain. It would suggest a quaint tale told so evenly and entrancingly that the memory of the tranquil, musical tones would be like the echo of golden beads dropped into a crystal dish. In one mood steeped in the ichors of Thalia, of Calliope, of Euterpe, of Erato, in the next following some sloping fancy down a fairy trail of thought sweet and refreshing as a field of daisies, one of the Marvel reminiscent hours would mean a transformation of lazy rising rings of rich Havana smoke into filmy lace pictures formed of cobwebs and starshine. His sayings were chaste as a Tiffany gem, his mind a palace, making men forget for the nonce that he held the destinies of the great banks as an egg shell in the palm of a giant, lulling them with this necromancy of tone and professional expertness into the security of a Vision house.

I had not spoken since I entered the rooms, for I saw that Resilius Marvel was in one of his dark moods. So well did I know him that I at once discerned that he was struggling with some great case where the dead blank wall of "No Clue" faced him grimly. He stood at the window looking out at the rain-blurred lights of a glowing thoroughfare, just now remindful of some woeful Bagdad. Out of that world of shadows a lone bird beat its wings against the window. Into its secret recesses Marvel seemed boring his way through obscure labyrinths, seeking that which he must find. Fitly framing the picture was a wall covered with duplicates of famous forged checks, portraits of the great counterfeiters, cabinet sections containing odd trophies of his career. Here was a stamped brick from Assyria four thousand years old—"the Book of the Dead"—one line of the hieroglyphics of which had solved an international mystery. Next was a rude seal from the Beloki Congo, wrested from the possession of a native chief who had flooded the country with "phoney" government scrip until Resilius Marvel had found him. Next was an ivory fan from Turkestan with a sanguinary streak that was the blood of a princess, a fragment from a dynamited American steel pillar of Hindia that could have told a racy tale of a smooth contractor. And a bulging scrap book, clasped and locked like a bank code ledger, containing his private personal notes on the new generation of bank criminals, modern in education as in an appreciation of the value at the graver's tool, "the drag," the raised check manipulator, the automobile as assets to crime against obsolete police methods.

Always there was an air of complete stillness in this inner room. At the disturbing sound without Resilius Marvel turned—distracted, and therefore annoyed. His eye fell upon Loti, his servitor, who, velvet-shod, noiselessly opened the door and closed it after him. The man had a face like one of those you see on old Roman medals, an acquaintance with the moods and ways of his master that enabled him to question intelligently and to respond through a look, a hand movement, a mere expression of the lips. Loti was of three generations who had given their entire lives to the production of four famous statues—one at the cemetery of Genoa, three at the beautiful Pere le Chaise at Paris. He was a theorist as to the sense of smell, holding that he could analyze a man by scenting his favorite dish. At him now in sharp silent challenge Marvel looked.

I know not what telepathic system bridged the chasm of inquiry and response, but at once Marvel straightened up magically as if touched by a sharp mental prod. Then he glanced at me, and I further knew that he had made some new and important discovery in the Paget case.

When I had first entered this room I felt sure that Marvel was preoccupied, and that, too, over the case I have mentioned. In fact I had come there on that business, being a bank man and myself interested in its outcome. To Marvel the banks were something more than clients—they were as children who went toupling down the line like tilted cards, once started in panic. It was for this reason, when the Clearing House after two recent bank failures feared a general run on deposits, that Marvel had exerted all his abilities to smother a scandal in the case of the Guardian Trust & Savings bank, of which young Tyler Paget was president.

That official was the son of one of the oldest financiers in the city. Fatherly influence had given the junior a fine start, in fact business had been so active that double the original capital was soon invested. It was trusting a great deal of responsibility to a very young and inexperienced man, but Paget, Jr., was of excellent personal character and habits, and energetic and ambitious. However, the minute a new bank is started there is an immediate invasion on the part of crooks, schemers, "pikers" and delinquents who have been flagged at the older institutions. Young Paget pretty shrewdly evaded most of the pitfalls, but one day "King" Gundorf walked into the bank.

It was not as Gundorf that he did this, but as Bogart Rutledge. He announced that he was about to buy out the old and established Acme Metals company, a concern so well known to Paget that he was at once interested. Gundorf stated that he was paying $400,000 for the business, half cash, now held in escrow, as a receipt showed. He wished the bank to loan him $200,000, for which he, as the new president of the Acme, would put up the entire $500,000 stocks of that company. The bank had no right to make a loan in one volume so largely in excess of proportional capital restrictions, but Gundorf claimed it would be for only ten days and offered a handsome bonus, and the deal was made.

In five days the explosion came. To his dismay Paget learned that the pretended Rutledge, in giving the collateral note for $200,000, had no authority to sign, at that time, as president of the Acme. This fact relieved the corporation of all liability and the bank held a worthless piece of paper and a non-valid stock transfer receipt. The next discovery was that Gundorf had disappeared with the $200,000 received from the bank, and that the $200,000 in escrow comprised counterfeit notes. When the escrow funds were examined this was made manifest, and at this point Resilius Marvel was called in.

He recognized the culprit from his earmarks at once. Gundorf had been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment in Brazil a year back. He was supposed to be out of the way, for a spell at least. But about six months since there had appeared on the market a fifty-dollar counterfeit note, which, to Marvel's experienced eyes, was the product of Gundorf's skill. Before any of them had been recognized as dangerous by the banks, Marvel had detected the flaws in the issue. There were two material variations from the good notes. As soon as he sent out this possibility of world-wide identification, all fifty-dollar notes were of course scanned closely.

To run down the counterfeits was Marvel's first purpose; to help out the Guardian Trust and Savings an added motive. The Acme people had lost nothing, as they simply invalidated the stock contract. Paget, however, was out $200,000. His father was now trying to raise this amount so the bank could continue, or, if necessary, go out of business honorably. The banks within the Clearing House were trying to smother publicity, for fear of a general run. Paget had been given thirty days by the bank examiners to clear the situation. He had technically violated the banking laws, and but for the pending strained financial situation his bank would have been closed and himself prosecuted.

The Guardian Trust and Savings cleared through our bank, Paget was a personal friend, I held fifty shares of the stock—that is how I was interested. For two weeks Marvel had been on the track of Gundorf. He had his own ideas as to how far catching him would relieve conditions.

"You are interested," he said, as I arose to leave the room, fearing I might be in the way. "Stay where you are. I have had a man watching the house where Gundorf lived until he put over this last deal of his."

"But vacant, I understand you to say?"

"Vacant, true, but the rent paid up for six months, and telephone, gas and electricity ordered kept ready for use and paid for ahead. I fancy my man has learned something at last, and I also imagine he is bringing somebody with him."

As the door opened on noiseless hinges Loti ushered into the room two men. The one who held the other a prisoner was a powerful, unkempt fellow, who resembled a tramp who might have been sleeping in a dog kennel over night. I later found out that this was literally true—but for a week, instead of a day.

His companion, cringing, terror-faced, wildly distraught, was a lithe, wiry man, brown as a berry, with small, beady eyes. His garb was half foreign, his actions those of a menial. He was in a frantic excess of terror, and trembled as Marvel fixed those grave, boring eyes upon him.

"I made the catch on suspicion," spoke his captor. "He was ringing at the door bell of the place we know, when I showed up. He's an innocent, and doesn't understand a word of English. Held out this card and this picture," and the speaker gave both to Marvel, who glanced at them and then passed them to me. The card bore the address of the house under surveillance. The photograph was a duplicate of one he had shown me more than once—"King" Gundorf.

Marvel nodded to his assistant, who departed like a man thoroughly trained in his profession. The foreigner stood now nervously pressing his unsteady hands together, the cold sweat gathering on his face. Once he held out his hand piteously for the return of the articles taken from him. Marvel never removed his eyes from him. I saw that he was studying him critically. He spoke a word to Loti I did not hear. As for himself, he went over to a bookcase. Loti went through the clothing of the man with remarkable rapidity. All he came across, as I saw, was a purse containing a small sum of money. Marvel hastily consulted half a dozen books, and turned and consulted the man.

"Comprenez vous moi?" he asked. But he need not have spoken for all the words conveyed to his strange guest.

"Wer bist du?"

The foreigner looked puzzled. Then he jabbered out a hideous jargon in some obscure tongue.

"Quien es usted?"

No, the man spoke neither French, German nor Spanish. In some oriental patois Marvel made a new try, followed by one in a South African dialect.

It was of no avail. Whoever the man, whatever his purpose in visiting the Gundorf house, he could not be intelligently approached on the subject. I saw Marvel grappling with this new, baffling problem in a mighty mental throe. Then he gave Loti an unspoken instruction and the latter left the room. Marvel backed to his desk. I saw him place his hands behind him, seize a broad topped bottle, remove the stopper, insert one finger in it and come again to the stranger. As if carelessly he touched him on the back with that finger, drew him about, opened the door and waved him from the room.

The man sped away at the injunction as though his feet were winged. Marvel pointed to my hat and overcoat. He briskly arrayed himself for the street. When we reached it no one was in sight. As we turned the corner I saw Loti on one side of the thoroughfare. On the other, racing along as though relieved from a vivid spell of restraint, was a man in the center of whose back glowed a dull splotch of phosphorus, an infallible guide at a distance, and explaining the manipulation of the bottle from the desk.

Twice we lost sight of Loti, whose duty it was to keep sight of the foreigner. On these occasions my companion was not at all perturbed. But his roving eyes were all the more watchful. I followed their direction more than once to observe some white marks on pavement or building, made, I knew afterwards, by a chalk crayon inserted in the end of the cane which Loti carried.

I do not think Loti spoke a half dozen words to his master as we finally came up with him, but these, the expression of his face, and some quick signs, seemed to convey to Marvel a world of intelligence. Loti stepped back, Marvel moved me aside with a pressure of his palm and pushed open the street door of one of those small upper story hotels with which the city abounds.

The inference was that Loti had traced his man to this place. I soon knew this for a certainty. I was not at all sure that some sound signal, remote and vague, was not conveyed to my companion—that, or something telepathic or mystic. At all events, from an attitude of prim, soldier-like patience, Loti suddenly started like a manikin unhinged. With a movement extremely courteous and apologetic, as if deprecating that he must be in advance, he proceeded up the stairs, and I followed him.

Not for an instant did he falter or deviate from a straight course. The hallway was lighted by lamps, but his eyes were cast down. Then, at the second landing I noticed a tiny green thread of raw silk close to the protecting baseboards alongside the stair treads, and guessed who had unreeled it. At the end of the third Loti, with unerring precision, arrived at a door, the transom of which showed light beyond. Almost but not quite noiselessly, his long, shapely fingers groped across a panel. Again he must have caught some sound signal in response, entirely unnoticed by myself. He turned the knob of the door and we entered the room.

Once more the foreigner was in evidence. He sat, or rather lay crouched back in a ragged arm chair, akin to the rest of the poor furniture of that poor room. The old terror lurked in the depths of his shrinking eyes, and he was hushed and inert as a person subdued by some deadening influence of power he dared not resist. Marvel had lifted a satchel to the rickety table in the center of the room. There was in the apartment apparently no other personal possession of the foreigner.

To my crude mind, crude at least as compared with the professional workings of the mental machinery of a great man and his equally remarkable assistant, it was the most natural thing in the world that Marvel, having cornered a mysterious quarry, should seize upon that satchel. Given a man who could not converse save in an obscure and unknown tongue, an investigation of his personal belongings might reveal everything—anything. Therefore the only sensation I experienced as Marvel pressed the catch that held the satchel locked was curiosity. But as the bending flaps opened out, to my amazement, Loti, with slight warning cry, betokening the most vivid alarm, was at the side of his master in a swift slide. He snatched at the satchel, snapped it shut again, and maintaining a tense grasp of the lock he stood pallid, his nostrils dilated, gazing with fixed and resolute challenge into the face of Marvel.

"It is—pestilence," he said simply, and slightly drew the satchel towards him. His fine mobile face expressed protection, defense. I noted a tremor spreading all over his sensitive frame, and he waved his hand. It made somewhat the same gesture that a person would make in dissipating an annoying cloud of thick smoke.

Marvel returned the daring glance of his ally. Then those quick thoughts of his seemed to make a brisk run. He shrugged his shoulders as if there was a potentiality to the suggestions of Loti he could not dispute. He took out his card case. I was near enough to him to read the name he scribbled in pencil—"Dr. Peter Horn."

I knew that he had sent for the most famous analyst in the city and I wondered what was coming next. Marvel was not the man to tell, at the present juncture. He sat down on the bed, facing the foreigner. He leaned his chin on his two hands, these resting on his knees, and fixed his eyes upon the cowering wretch as if he was looking through him and beyond him.

It must have been fully an hour before Loti showed up. He was followed by the doctor, whom I had seen before—a big, burly, heavily whiskered man, breathing deeply, looking everywhere—a restless monument of power and force.

There was a small room with glass doors connecting with the one we were in. It seemed to have been used as a dressing room before the hotel had sunk to second class, and, being small, went gratis with the larger apartment. The doctor barely nodded to Marvel, who did not speak so much as a word. He was wont to impress his friends into service in a professional case. The doctor knew his ways as I know them. Loti must have explained what was expected of him. He proceeded to business at once.

Dr. Horn had brought up from his automobile a large case. He set this on the floor, and his first movement was to proceed to the glass doors, thrust them open, survey the space afforded, and then point to the table.

"Move it," he said tersely, and Loti carried it into the adjoining apartment. There was gas there, and the doctor lit a jet. Then he carried his case into the room, closed the doors, and drew from the case a glass head with air tubes at the top. He sprinkled some deodorizing acid about the room from a bottle, put on a pair of gloves, took out a microscope and proceeded to his strange task.

The foreigner paid no attention to all this. Marvel did not seem particularly interested. We four were left in the outer room, but could discern the doctor's activities through the connecting door. I noticed Loti glide to the side of his master; I caught the words:

"Your sixth sense tells you that, does it?" responded Marvel lightly. "Then it must be South America."

How true that instinctive sense of odor, of which Loti made a theory, was correct, the examination of the satchel by the doctor would soon tell. The illustrious savant rapidly pulled forth its contents. It held nothing but a few worn garments. Selecting a skull cap from the litter, upon this the doctor focussed his microscope. There were flashes of finely mirrored plates and instruments, the application of acids, a mixture of the scrapings of the wool from the cap, massed in a little lake of chemicals. Then the doctor closed the satchel, poured a new bottle of some disinfecting agent over it, and replacing his analytical gear in its case, came out into the larger room.

"Peru," he said simply to Marvel. "Southern part. The germs are the a bacilli, peculiar to that country alone. And to the falling sickness particularly prevalent there. You will yet come before the great societies, Loti," he added admiringly. "You diagnosed it right—a banana country, and the pestilential taint. The man should talk Spanish," he supplemented, with a keen glance over the foreigner.

"But he doesn't," responded Marvel tersely. "I know what to do now. Thanks, doctor."

He glanced at Loti and motioned me to follow him and Dr. Horn. At the street Marvel dismissed the latter with a nod, proceeded along briskly, hailed the first taxi we met, gave a brief direction, and we were whirled away to a street in the foreign quarter.

The taxi halted in front of a row of old buildings. Their occupants were incongruous. One little store bore a window full of more varieties of sausages than I expected to exist in the entire world. There was a store given over to Hungarian wines, a Japanese restaurant and two curio shops.

These were reminders of world's fair years, of stranded importations, and Marvel seemed to know them like a book. It was not five minutes before he reappeared from one of the curio stores. A swarthy man in a fez was with him. We were again whirling along to our terminus, the hotel.

It was all so swift, so silent, so impressive—Marvel's resistless rush of ideas and events, carrying me along irresistibly—that it reminded me of the changing scenes of a motion picture film. The curio man was ushered into the room where we had left Loti and the other. He viewed the foreigner with a measuring glance, and spoke half a dozen words in a tongue-twisting dialect.

In an instant the foreigner was transformed. Eyes, frame and soul seemed to awake. He uttered a joyful cry and flung himself on his knees, clasping those of the curio man, jabbering away twixt sobs of delight and tears of relief.

Marvel softly rolled a cigarette with those deft hands of his, which with equal facility could slip a ring upon the dainty finger of a debutante or snap a pair of handcuffs around the brawny wrists of a burglar. I knew he divined the end of circumstnce and the beginning of coherency. There was a rapid colloquy between the foreigners. Then there was a whispered conversation carried on by Marvel and the curio man in a corner of the room. The latter returned to the prisoner. Some animated discussion ensued. And then the foreigner did a quite remarkable thing.

He removed his shoes, and for the first time I noticed how broad and how thick were the soles. Their owner looked appealingly at the curio man, who nodded reassuringly, as though promising protection. The former took a shell-like article from his pocket, stripped back the edge of each sole, tore them lengthwise, and from those hiding places produced two oblong rigid articles cased and encased in cushions of the softest wool.

I watched Marvel as he received these, placed them in his pocket, and made a motion to Loti, who in turn touched my arm ceremoniously with the simple words:

"We will go."

"To sum up," Resilius Marvel advised me when I visited his office the next evening, "the two packages were these," and he produced from his desk two steel plates and proofs of the same.

"The $50 plates," I remarked naturally.

"Not at all," was the dissent—"duplicates of the old plates, with the flaws I pointed out rectified. The old issue served their purpose. These people are shrewd. Cashiers will be on the lookout for the old flaws only. The new notes would pass without suspicion, at least for a time. I know the man who has been making these plates, but I did not know that he was working, secluded in Peru, until last night. That native was sent with these plates, concealed as you have seen. He was instructed in detail what he was to do. There has been a hitch somewhere, at least a change in the plans of the people at this end of the line, of Gundorf and his associates. That he or they will be looking out for the Peruvian, however, is so certain that I shall install myself in the house where we found the native. You may help me out, and I will tell you how."

Marvel proceeded to do so. For two nights in succession I carried food supplies to my patient and invincible friend, and messages from him and to Loti. The third night, as I approached the house by the rear, as I always did, I noticed a strange thing and halted, looking up sharply.

A man was leaping the space between the two houses. I knew that he saw me and was startled, for I watched him peer down at me. I could only construe that this person was entering the vacant house surreptitiously by the roof and scuttle route. At just that moment a clear sound proceeded from the house I was about to enter—the sharp, quick jangle of a telephone bell.

The man aloft must have been suspicious of my appearance. Perhaps he caught the sound of footsteps in the house, those of its solitary occupant. At any rate, I heard a sharp snap, a severed wire whipped down between the houses, nearly striking my face, and the man leaped back over the space and disappeared.

Perhaps two full minutes passed away, and I was about to enter the house, when the rear door flew open and Marvel was upon me.

"No delay!" he spoke quickly, and seized the food valise I carried and flung it on the step. Then he started on a run, reached the next street, and hailed a taxicab, and gave the quick words:

"Central telephone office."

"What?" I interrogated simply.

"A crash of thunder."

I did not understand, but I hoped to, soon. He left me, his first point of destination reached. I watched him rush into the telephone building, then out of it, with the sharp mandate: "Signal service bureau," to the chauffeur—"Bad system in there," to myself.

"You are ready for a fifty mile run, double fares?" he inquired of the chauffeur as he came out from the weather brueau.

"I'm ready," was the willing response.

"My wait at the vacant house," said Marvel, as he fled down a country road, "was rewarded by a telephone call. I was at the receiver promptly. 'Is that you Franklin?' was challenged, and then—'It's King'—and I knew I was talking with Gundorf. There was an interruption, and the current went."

"Yes, the wires on the roof were cut—" I began.

"No, a crash of thunder at the far end of the line."

I pointed to the blue sky, with all the stars a-sparkle. Marvel laughed.

"There was no trace at the exchange of the call," he explained. "Suburban, that was all. At the weather bureau a passing storm cloud reported at one station only—at Bloxton. We are going there."

We reached Bloxton in an hour and a half. Marvel located the telephone exchange. He came out bright and brisk.

"Message sent from the office here direct by one Colonel Worthington," he said to me, after giving a direction to the chauffeur. "Newcomer. Blind. Passing cloud, clap of thunder—only one—struck the wires. My man."

I was standing just behind Marvel when he entered the library of a secluded house at the edge of the town. A bewhiskered man with big, obscuring goggles, was seated in an armchair. Marvel approached him, looked keenly at him, reached over and—removed a false ear. This was the identifying trademark of "King" Gundorf, half an ear bitten off by a swindler confrere in the years past.

I know not in detail how the case was adjusted, but Gundorf gave up nearly all of the $200,000. I think the bargain was that he should leave the country. At all events, the Guardian Trust & Savings did not go out of business, and is still within the clearing house.

A week later, while in the office of the United Bankers' Protective association, Marvel led me with a look to his desk. He opened a drawer and took out the photograph of a lovely woman. Her name, "Orthello," was written on the card. He next unrolled the plans of a wonderful mansion. With a pencil he drew a line through its first story.

Then I knew that his exertions in the Paget case had paid for that much of his future home, and that he was that much nearer to the fruition of his dream of a home—and Orthello.

Ridiculing the Puritans.

It is the fashion of late to speak condescendingly of the Puritans, as of a people of narrow views and of men of sour temperament; but no descendant of theirs, and no later immigrant who now dwells in the commonwealth they founded, and enjoys the blessings which it bestows upon us, will fail to glory in being able to trace back to such forerunners, writes William Roscoe Thayer in the American Magazine. The story of the conditions which faced the passengers of the 'Mayflower' when they landed at Plymouth can never be too often repeated. To have as founders of our state men and women who 'had the fear of God in their hearts, but feared the face of no man,' ranks as the initial glory of Massachusetts.

FRANCE—MODERN CIRCLE.

Some of the boys are not coming back from France. Don't jump at ghastly conclusions: they are not coming back from France for the simple and sufficient reason that they, like many of the British Tommies, the initpodean Anzacs and even those faithful sons of the prophet, the Arabs, will fall head over heels in love with France.

From the front comes the report that many of the British soldiers are finding in France that "neater, sweeter maiden" and that "cleaner, greener land" which Kipling placed geographically as somewhere east of Suez. In other words they are marrying French girls and are preparing to settle down in this pleasant land of France. Not only the British, the Australians, the New Zealanders and the Arabs are preparing to make themselves homes near the scene of their battles, but even the Ghurkas and the Indo-Chinese troops, according to one correspondent, are saying, "If you ship us home we'll come back."

How account for the spell of France! Was there ever such a Circe among nations! Why, even Sir Philip Sidney in the days when "perfidious Albion" warred unceasingly on the ambitious Gauls, wrote of "that sweet enemy, France." Bald-headed Caesar was captivated by her charm. Her literature won the admiration of that conceited brute, Frederick the Great. Her language has threatened the hegemony of home tongues in every civilized land in Europe. Someone has said that every man is capable of two patriotisms—one for his own country and the other for France. France has cast its magic over men so far apart in time and temperament as Benjamin Franklin, philosopher, envoy and wit, and Alan Seeger, penniless poet, adventurer and soldier in La Legion Etrangere.

France is widowed and worn, war weary, shattered and bereft, but she is still La Belle France, she still rises in majesty to the Corsican's boast of "la grande nation." France has been tried in the fiery furnace and has been proved pure gold.

FACTS THAT CONDEMN.

Gen. Pershing sailed for France about June 1. Thousands of troops—perhaps twenty thousand, perhaps more—followed him within the succeeding three weeks. They were fully equipped with small arms and small arms ammunition.

On May 22—a week before Pershing sailed and two weeks before most of his troops sailed—it was an established fact at Washington that one third of the small arms ammunition supplied the expedition from the Frankford Arsenal was not only defective but actually dangerous to the men carrying it. Chemical action had led to a deterioration that made it useless for fighting purposes. Worse than that, its presence on the Pershing ships was a menace to their safety!

Yet Pershing was allowed to sail away in utter ignorance of the fact, and to remain in utter ignorance of it until August 1—sixty-seven days after it was known to the war department at Washington. Had circumstances forced the Pershing command into immediate action in France, our men would have found in battle that one-third of their fighting material was useless.

It seems unbelievable. Yes such is the testimony given by Secretary of War Baker and Gen. Crozier before the Senate committee last week. It is not a rare occurrence for powder to be found defective; but it is a rare occurrence that a war department should permit an expeditionary force to sail to foreign lands with powder more menacing to it than to its enemies! Silence, either in the press or elsewhere, regarding such carelessness is a betrayal of the nation's highest interests. It is not an offense to be hidden from public attention and condemnation. Instant dismissal is the lightest punishment to be meted out to the responsible officials. For such gross blundering there should be several penalties. It has the character of the stories we read of the Russian army's poor equipment rather than of our own.

Conceding the facts, as Secretary Baker and Gen. Crozier did recently does not lessen the offense. Why was not the defective powder instantly ordered out of our army camps and off of Gen. Pershing's ships? Why were not commanding officers notified of the condition of the powder? It is inconceivable that this was not promptly done; yet the fact is that it was not. While our men in France—almost in the face of the enemy—were serenely confident because of their implicit faith in their equipment the war department at Washington knew that they were insecure, and that, if attacked, they could not properly defend themselves.

These are facts not to be blinked at. They reflect a condition that must be promptly corrected.

Married.

POLK—OFFUTT—Cards announcing the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Offutt, of Oakland, daughter of Mrs. Daniel E. Offutt, were received in Oakland Monday, the ceremony having been performed in Cumberland on Sunday. The groom is Mr. Joseph T. Polk, who is connected with the Maryland Casualty Company, a large banking concer of Baltimore. The announcement came as a great surprise to the most intimate friends of the bride, who is one of Oakland's most highly esteemed young ladies. The couple will reside in Baltimore.

ARNOLD—GRAY—In Baltimore on Sunday last, Miss Alice Belle Gray of that city and Mr. Harrison Morton Arnold, recently of Mountain Lake Park, but now of Clarksburg, West Va., were united in marriage. Mr. Arnold is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Arnold and is a splendid young man.

A GREAT PROGRAN

Is Being Arranged For the Fair of Oct. 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Those in charge of the management of the big Oakland Fair which will be held this year on October 2, 3, 4 and 5, are busy arranging a bigger and better program for this year's event than ever before. Special attention has been given to the securing of several clean, high class attractions in the amusement line and a contract has already been closed with Carlisle's Great Wild West Shows, in addition to numerous other attractive entertainment features, in an endeavor to have something doing every hour of every day, so that there will not be a dull moment on any of the four days. A fine band has also been engaged, which will enliven the fair grounds and the daily parades with good, spirited martial music. Several good, free attractions are also on the program.

Special attention will be given to the live stock and agricultural exhibits, a large number of which have already been booked, with splendid prospects for a great many more to come, and the prizes offered for these exhibits are attracting the attention of the farmers and stock raisers throughout Garrett county and neighboring states. The entry books for exhibits will be opened shortly and those who contemplate entering the contests for prizes should make their entries early and avoid the rush of the last few days before the opening date, thus helping the management to make the proper arrangements for space and the proper cataloging of the exhibits.

A large force of workmen has been busy for the last couple of weeks repairing the live stock stalls and sheds on the fair grounds, and making a number of needed repairs to the inside of the building, as well as cleaning up the grounds, and most of the arrangements for opening day are nearing completion.

There is every indication that this year's show will far surpass anything ever before attempted, and the management feels highly encouraged over the bright out look. Make your arrangements to attend every day and bring your friends with you.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The season is virtually over. The heavy frosts of Tuesday and Wednesday mornings sending away most of those lingering here.

It is reported that the Chautauqua Hotel has again changed hands, this time to a former owner, Mr. Wolf.

The streets in the Park are being covered with sinders furnished by the B. & G. railroad. This will make fine streets when completed.

Work has been resumed on the bridge which was suspended on account of high water.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Speers will leave for their winter home at Speers, Pa., the last of this week.

LOST—A gold watch, made by Armiger, Baltimore; engraved on back "H. B. H." Finder will be liberally rewarded by returning same to G. Semmes Hamill, Oakland.—Adv.

SAVED ALLIES DECLARES LAW

Bonar Law Says Germany Cannot Understand Human Nature.

London, Sept. 12—Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking today at a luncheon given by the Empire Parliamentary Association to Medill McCormick, Congressman-at large for Illinois said:

"In everything connected with the military arm the Germans have shown remarkable results, even genius. But in dealing with questions of human nature they have repeatedly made mistakes which have been the salvation of the Entente Allies. No mistake they have made will be so great in its consequence as that which drove the United States into the war."

"The Germans lately," Bonar Law continued, "have been saying that the Entente was relying on the United States as their last hope. I want to say to you that we do rely on the United States.

"As Chancellor of the Exchquer I am ready to say to you now what I should have been sorry to have had to say six months ago—namely, that without the United States' financial assistance the Allies would have been in disastrous straits today."

"We have not yet seen the end.

"Perhaps I may be excused from speaking of the Russian situation except to say how much we sympathize with Russia in her time of anguish, and that we hope she yet may be able to render us assistance in the great cause.

"The American people, like us, are people of hard practical sense and realize that the war now has become largely a question of nerves, endurance and staying powers. Thank God we of England and America have those qualities and shall see this thing through to victory.

"We have two special reasons for satisfaction at the coming of the United States. First, it is the best possible proof that our cause is just and righteous; and, second, we know we now have on our side resources which are more than sufficient to achieve victory.

"The United States possesses the greatest wealth and resources of any nation in the world. Moreover, as a nation they have shown inventive genius and adaptability which they must inevitably apply successfully to the prosecution of the war."

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fulton, N. Y. — "Why will women pay out their money for treatment and receive no benefit, when so many have proved that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will make them well? For over a year I suffered so from female weakness I could hardly stand and was afraid to go on the street alone. Doctors said medicines were useless and only an operation would help me, but Lydia E. APOLOGIZING TO THE TIGER

Raymond Blathwayt Tells of His Experiences While Connected With a Traveling Menagerie.

In a book of reminiscences, "Through Life and Round the World," Raymond Blathwayt tells the following story in connection with a traveling menagerie he attached himself to while knocking about the West during his salad days.

"One day just after breakfast," he says, "I peeped in at the messroom door. There was a full-grown tiger licking the jam and bacon off the plates.

"'Oh, I beg your pardon!' I ejaculated, as I hastily shut the door. A moment after I met Jack, the tiger's keeper.

"'I can't find that other tiger nowhere,' he said to me. 'I guess I've mislaid the old critter.'

"'You have,' I icily replied, for I was a good deal annoyed with the danger I had so narrowly escaped. 'You'll find him in the messroom licking the plates.'

"'Thank you, mate,' he said.

"An hour after I overheard the proprietor asking his little son if he had washed up the breakfast dishes.

"'Hadn't no need to, pop; the tiger licked 'em like he knew they wanted cleanin'!'."

Why Bottle Was Empty.

One delight of small Harold was to go on an errand to a neighboring store. After school yesterday at No. 3 he was sent by his mother to get a siphon of vichy. He was long in returning. When he did arrive, his mother scolded him for consuming so much time.

"Why," she exclaimed, "and the siphon is nearly empty. Do you mean to tell me that is all the vichy there was in the bottle when you got it?"

"Well, mamma," Harold replied, "on the way home I met little Sarah's cat."

"Well?"

"The cat said 'p-s-s-t' to me and the siphon said 'p-s-s-t' to her."

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 2

THE SHEPHERD OF CAPTIVE ISRAEL.

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 34.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.—Psa. 23:1.

With the complete subversion of the kingdom of Judah, the national consciousness was largely crushed and the people were without heart for the common affairs of life. Ezekiel, though born in Jerusalem, prophesied in Babylon near the River Kebar. The object of his prophesying was to encourage the captives by placing before them God's promise of their return to their own land. His name signifies, "God will strengthen," which is very appropriate to the mission which in the providence of God he was called upon to fill.

I. Israel's Faithless Shepherds Denounced. (vv. 1-10). These false shepherds included the kings, princes, judges and priests. Ezekiel points out that the captivity was because of sin, but he shows that the greatest guilt obtains with reference to these leaders. They were placed in the position to care for and protect the sheep. The following indictments are brought against them:

1. They fed themselves instead of the flock (v. 2). They were essentially selfish. They ministered to themselves instead of the sheep. Too many today are filling public offices for the sake of private gain. Sometimes even ministers are found who are more concerned about themselves, their pleasures and profits, than they are about the souls of the people who support them.

2. They were cruel (v. 3). They were not only mere hirelings, guilty of looking after themselves, but they actually behaved like robbers, preying upon the flocks. All are guilty of this same sin who use their influence and power to the disadvantage of others. In the theocratic kingdom such behavior was peculiarly obnoxious, as the rulers and ministers were representatives of Jehovah himself. The minister and public officer today is acting in his capacity for God, not for himself, therefore he should make the cause of heaven his chief concern.

3. They neglected the diseased, wounded, wayward, and lost (vv. 4-6). As a result of their selfish cruelty the sheep were without food; therefore exposed to disease; had no bond of unity, were exposed to the ravages of wild beasts. God's flocks are in many places thus suffering and dying because they have not been fed. God's judgments are against such (vv. 7-10).

II. The Faithful Shepherd. (vv. 11-16). The Shepherd here is none other than Jesus Christ. The wonderful blessings here described will be realized by Israel in millenial times. This blessed condition will be ushered in by the second coming of Christ. How sincerely all should pray, "Thy kingdom come." When the true Shepherd comes:

1. He will seek his lost sheep (v. 11). Though they have gone astray through wilfulness on their part, and neglect on the part of faithless shepherds, Jesus will seek them out and save them. To save the lost was his peculiar mission (Luke 19:10).

2. He will rescue them from the power of their enemies (v. 12). God's sheep have real enemies and they have fallen into the enemies' hands, but the Faithful Shepherd is able to deliver them. "No one is able to pluck them out of his hands" (John 10:28, 29).

3. He will bring them back to their own land (v. 13). Poor, scattered Israel shall one day (may it be soon!) be brought back to their own land. This is the one unmistakable sign by which we may know the beginning of the end of this dispensation. Be assured that it is not wars, nor pestilences that mark the sign of the close of this age, but the movements of Israel.

4. He will feed them (vv. 14, 15). "I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick; but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment."

5. He will seek that which was lost (v. 16). That which has been driven away he will seek and bring it back again.

6. He will heal them from weakness and suffering (v. 16). All the wounds which Israel has received these many centuries shall be healed.

III. The Golden Age (vv. 23-27). The vision of the world as it now is, is most disheartening. It is midnight darkness. In this blackness we wonder why God does not interpose. We wonder how he can be silent. While midnight is upon us we are hopeful, for we see the bow of God's promise of better things flung across the sky. This present order shall disappear before the new. In that new order:

1. Jesus Christ, David's Son, shall be king (vv. 23, 24). This new era of blessedness can only come into realization when God's Son shall establish his kingdom upon the earth.

On Floor of the Ocean.

It is believed that to an enormous extent the bed of the ocean is covered with lava and pumice stone. Still more remarkable is it to find the floor of the ocean covered in many parts with the dust of meteorites. These bodies whirl about in the heavens like miniature comets, and are for the most part broken into innumerable fragments.

A Few Wild Turkey Facts.

There are three varieties of wild turkeys, the Mexican, North American and Honduras. The Honduras is a native of the tropics and has a plumage equal in brilliancy to that of the peacock. Attempts to domesticate this turkey have not been successful. The domestic turkeys have been developed from the Mexican and North American varieties.

Sunday Walking Was Illegal.

In England during 1669 two men were found guilty of the crime of walking from Bristol to Bath on Sunday and were fined 20 shillings ($4.80) each. The only traders allowed to travel in England at that time were milkmen. At the present time railroads have provided a special Sunday schedule, excursions, etc., in order to accommodate the traveling public.

Embroidery an Ancient Art.

In Exodus the "embroiderer" is contrasted with the "cunning workman." The art of embroidery by the loom was extensively practiced by the nations of antiquity. The Egyptians and Babylonians were noted for it. Embroidery with the needle was a Phrygian invention of a later date.

HARVEST WAR CROP OF APPLES SHORTLY

It Will Equal Two Bushels for Every Man, Woman and Child in the Land.

STAPLE FOODS TO ALLIES

Motto This Year Is "Eat an Apple and Send a Biscuit"—Unusual Need For Handling Crop—May Be Short of Help.

The United States is about to harvest its great war crop of apples. It equals two bushels to every man, woman and child in the country. In order to send as much staple food as possible to our fighting allies, Americans are urged to use as many apples as possible. The motto this year is: "Eat an apple and send a biscuit."

War conditions also confront the apple growers, for there is a scarcity of pickers, and careful preparations must now be made to see that this crop is all safely harvested and put into storage. Now is the time to begin organizing picking crews in every apple growing section. A survey of the situation shows that the farmer will need co-operation from business men in the towns and cities round about at which he trades, and which have just as great an interest in this crop as the farmer himself. This is emergency organization work to be taken up immediately by chambers of commerce, boards of trade, state and county councils of defense, and business men generally.

The labor supply to harvest this crop exists right in the cities adjacent to the apple orchards in most cases, but the draft and demands of factories and railroads for labor have disturbed the normal supply of workers upon which the farmer usually draws, and it is necessary to recruit new kinds of workers. People who have never regarded themselves as apple pickers may this year be asked to go to the orchards and help get in the crop for patriotic reasons.

The organization work should take the form of an immediate survey of labor resources to see where a picking force is to be recruited. Stores and factories can often release clerks and workmen for this service if notified in time. Families who would like a week or two of vacation in the country with light, healthy outdoor work at satisfactory wages, may also be induced to join the picking army. It has been suggested that the schools might be opened later this year so that boys and girls can be sent to the orchards, but this will not be necessary in all cases. One very good source of pickers can be found among the women's organizations of this country.

Much is heard about the scarcity of labor, but there is not as great a scarcity as most people imagine. Workers upon whom the farmer depends in ordinary times have simply been shifted into other occupations, and war conditions demand that business men step in, locate other classes of workers who can be shifted to the orchards for this emergency and see that the farmer has plenty of help.

The principles of careful fruit picking are very simple, and easily understood. If the farmer can start with two or three experienced pickers and spend a little time explaining good picking methods to his volunteers he should get excellent results, for these volunteers, while new to the work, will also be people of good average intelligence, and the war emergency will appeal to their interest so that they will be more than ready to help harvest the crop skillfully.

Apple growers are advised to get in touch with the business organizations in their nearest town, ask that help be given in securing pickers and report the number of pickers needed by themselves. One of the greatest difficulties in organizing harvest hands for any crop is that of gathering accurate information as to how many helpers are needed on each farm and in each township. For lack of such information it very often happens that one township will be handicapped because it is without sufficient helpers and a township twenty-five or thirty miles away will have a surplus of workers. By ascertaining in advance just how many workers will be needed in each locality, business organizations will be able to recruit a sufficient force and there will be neither scarcity nor surplus in any section.

This year's apple crop calls for special methods of handling. The size of the crop makes it necessary to send only the first-class fruit to market and to see that all seconds and culls are sold in bulk around home or worked up into by-products. There must be great care to see that apples are not exposed to the heat or outdoors after picking, but are properly housed in temporary storage places on the farm and carefully cooled. The scarcity of pickers will probably make it necessary to pick and house the crop first and grade and pack it afterwards. Full directions for handling the fruit will be published later.

The great big task immediafely ahead is that of securing a picking force, and in this work the business man and the farmer are co-operating to an extent never known before. This is a war crop. It will be harvested with a war organization.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS SPOKE

What the American Soldier Intends to Do With Kaiser Is Not Understood in England.

With commendable enterprise a London editorial brother seeks to clarify for his readers the quaint expression of certain American soldiers who have intimated that their first undertaking in Europe will be to "can the kaiser." In interpreting them to intend to seal up his high mightiness hermetically, however, the Londoner's zeal outruns his information.

Nix, nix, friend, it doesn't mean that at all! says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It means merely that they propose to decorate the German emperor with hardware; to take his taw; pour the leather into him; put him on the pan; slip him one on the wind! kidnap his Angora; show him where he gets off. To put it more plainly, having bought chips in a game where the custom has been to play 'em close to the waistcoat, the Americans have taken off the limit and announce they will copper all bets, see all raises and intend, the very first time the kaiser gets his feet wet, to call him off the Christmas tree.

It is plain in the circumstances that our British brethren are about to find their knowledge of English handsomely increased.

Children and Untruths.

Why do children lie? Edwin S. Puller in the Mothers' Magazine answers the question by saying that the imagination of a child is stronger than his intellect, that fiction is as real to a child as fact.

"The cure for lies inspired by imagination," he asserted, "is the education of the child's intellect to distinguish between fact and fancy. As his error is mental, not normal, his cure must be mental. It would be a grave error of training to attempt to suppress his imagination as a cure for his untruths. Imagination is the mainspring which moves his mentality to growth, hence it should be directed into rational channels and not curbed.

SAVING TOMATO SEED ON THE FARM

College Park, Aug. 30.—It is the custom with tomato growers to buy their seed from the market. This has been done, but often times with considerable loss to the grower. The seed, of course, can be secured in this way at little cost, which no doubt, has appealed to the growers more than anything else; however, there is another consideration in this connection. The seed bought upon open market may have come, and often does come from plants that are more or less diseased. The plants may not only be diseased, but they are in many cases weak and unprolific. This is especially true of seed that is saved from the general run of tomatoes at the canning houses and hundreds of pounds of seed are saved every year by this method.

A much better way to secure good tomato seed is to save it from the best plants in the field. This can be done by marking the plants with a stake about the time they begin to ripen fruit and by gathering the fruit from the marked hills separately. This seed is squeezed out into a barrel or the whole fruit of the tomatoes themselves placed in the barrel and crushed, after which water is added to the contents, and allowed to stand for two or three days, or until fermentation takes place, at which time the pulp will rise and the seed will sink to the bottom. The water is then poured off, together with whatever pulp may be removed with the water, and a fresh supply of water added. After stirring the contents, allow it to settle and pour off again. This may be repeated until the seed is fairly clean, after which it is removed and spread out to dry in a place where birds and mice cannot feed upon it.

Some of the canners of the State are co-operating in this good work by paying either the usual price or within a few cents of the usual price for the seed tomatoes, and still allow the grower to take home with him the seed. This can be done very well where the canner puts up a pulp or a catsup.

Seed saved as suggested here will yield a very good income on the extra expense of saving it.

This is not a new theory, but a demonstrated fact, as many of the growers are now practicing it. This method of improving the crop has already been applied to other crops such as potatoes, in which case the seed is saved by the hill method, and seed corn saved in the field, and wheat in which the plant berry is selected from the most prolific strains, thus producing higher yielding strains and varieties.

BEEKEEPERS SHOULD REQUEEN THEIR COLONIES NOW.

College Park, Aug. 30.—The proper time to prepare for the season's honey crop is the fall before. If the preparation is left until next spring a considerable reduction in the crop of 1918 will result. Prepare now.

All beekeeping operations previous to the honey flow should have for their object the securing of the greatest possible number of bees ready for field work when the flow starts. A colony cannot be too strong in field bees at this time. However, the condition of the colonies previous to and during winter determines to a large extent their strength in the spring. Also, if they are weak in the spring it is almost impossible to increase their strength sufficiently to secure much honey from the early flows in Maryland. It is essential for best results that preparation be started this coming fall.

Successful wintering depends upon the quality and quantity of food, sufficient protection and room and young, vigorous bees. Colonies should be wintered in double bodies with 40-50 pounds of honey in the top body. They should also be in a sheltered place, and packed thoroughly to protect them from the cold. If these conditions exist a colony of young, vigorous bees will winter successfully, increase rapidly in the spring and be sufficiently strong to produce a maximum crop even from early flows.

Numerous and vigorous workers are the results of a young and vigorous queen. Usually a queen's best efforts are limited to the first two years of her life, consequently it is advisable to requeen consistently every two years where honey production is the main business. A young newly-mated queen will produce quantities of vigorous workers, a condition which is highly desirable in the fall when the older queens are so apt to check their brood rearing.

August is the most profitable time, therefore, to requeen. New queens may be purchased from some reliable dealer or raised in the home apiary. Care should be used in their introduction to avoid loss as it is a bit difficult to secure the acceptance of a new queen at this time of year. The beekeeper should acquaint himself with the best methods of queen rearing and introduction so that he may take every opportunity to produce a few queens every year thus cutting down the expense of buying from queen breeders.

Colonies headed by these young prolific queens will develop a great number of young bees late in the season capable of successfully withstanding the winter and living long enough in the spring to rapidly build up the colonies for the honey flow.

TREATING WHEAT SEED FOR DISEASES

College Park, Sept. 6.—An inspection of wheat fields during the month of June in several counties of Maryland revealed the fact that considerable loss was being caused by certain diseases such as Smut and Scab, which may in a large measure be controlled by applying certain preventive measures. These diseases are caused by small parasitic organisms which enter the wheat plant, and weaken it, so that it is unable to form its grain in the usual way. One of these diseases, known as Bunt or stinking smut, is readily controlled by treating the seed with Formalin, 1 pint to 40 gallons of water. The water may be emersed in the Formalin Solution for ten minutes, during which time the grain is stirred or shaken to drive off all the air; so that the solution will penetrate the grooves of the grains, and also allow the chaffy kernels to rise. These should be skimmed off. The wheat is then spread out to dry, after which it may be sown or stored until sowing time.

Or the wheat may be spread out on the floor and sprinkled with the Formalin solution, after which it is scooped over and sprinkled again. This is repeated until all of the berries are wet with the solution, after which the pile of grain is covered over with burlap bags or canvas, and allowed to stand from five to ten hours. The grain is then spread out to dry as directed above.

The Maryland State College is planning to demonstrate this method of treatment in every community of the State this fall where wheat is grown. Anyone interested in having a demonstration on his farm, should mention the fact to his County Agent. The demonstrations will be started about August 15th, and continued for two months.

A big difference has been observed between the crop grown from untreated and unfanned seed on the one hand, and recleaned from treated seed on the other. It is, therefore, planned to reclean the seed, running it through the fanning mill two or three times before treating it by the Formalin method. The grains removed by the fanning mill are scabby ones and the smutted ones, both of which not only yield very little or not at all, but also infect the plants from healthy kernels. The recleaning of the seed and the treating it with Formalin should become a part of the general farm practice wherever wheat is grown.

With wheat at $2.60 per bushel, we cannot afford to take chances on these diseases, which may be controlled at so little cost.

SILAGE MIXTURES IMPORTANT.

College Park, Sept. 6.—The high cost of grain together with the necessity of using more of the total production for human food than ever before means that a large part of the grain mixture ordinarily fed for milk production must be replaced by long feed. Legume hay such as clover, alfalfa, or soybean when fed with good silage will maintain a medium milk production and greatly reduce the amount of grain required for larger productions.

The principal crop for the silo is corn, although sorghum and kaffir corn are used in sections where corn cannot be grown on account of climatic conditions. Grain crops in combination with legumes such as wheat and vetch, oats and crimson clover, corn and soybeans or cowpeas have been successfully ensiled.

The legumes alone, do not make a good quality of silage owing to the absence of sufficient sugar for proper fermentation. In Maryland there are a number of factory by-products which make good silage. Pea vines, corn husks and sweet corn fodder all make good silage. However, sweet corn fodder should be more nearly mature than field corn before it is ready for the silo.

When the corn is in the glazed stage, it contains two-thirds more dry matter than when in the milk stage. Also, corn in the milk stage will make a silage more acid than when more nearly mature. In a normal season the proper time to cut corn for the silo is when it shows the first signs of ripening.

Silage should be cut from one-half to one inch in length and the knives on the cutter should be kept sharp. In order to keep the silage of uniform composition some sort of a distributor will be found most convenient. Two men in the silo with a distributor can pack the silage sufficiently. The edge next to the wall should be kept higher than the center and tramped constantly. When the filling is completed the top should be leveled. If several barrels of water are added and the top tramped each day for two or three days not more than six or eight inches of silage will spoil. In order to prevent waste the top may be covered with straw or corn from which the ears have been removed. The top of the silage may also be covered with oats, which will sprout and make an air tight seal.

Silage spoils in two ways. If it has the appearance of rotted manure, air has gained access to the silage. Spoiling of this kind is frequently found near the doors. If white mold is found the indications are that the corn was too dry and water should have been added. If a layer of spoiled silage is found around the edge of the silo it indicates that the walls of the silo are not air tight or that the sufficient tramping was not done when the silo was filled.

A Pursuing Shadow

By ELLIOTT FOSTER

"Captain," said the general, "here is a dispatch of importance which I wish you to deliver at once to General Taylor. I do not think there are any Mexicans in the region between our two separate forces, but there may be. You can either take an escort or scout your way alone."

Captain Allen Duane paled. His general looked at his aid-de-camp curiously, wonderingly, for he knew him to be a brave man, then asked, "Which course will you adopt?"

"I shall scout through alone."

As if the captain had chased away a disagreeable suspicion as to his courage, the general turned complacently to other matters.

What was it that caused the color momentarily to leave the cheek of the young officer at being ordered upon an ordinary duty? He did not know himself. He knew only that some vague message had come to him to tell him that this would be to him a night of—what? He did not know. More in fear of cowardice than danger, he shook off the disagreeable impression, which melted before his resolution like mist before the sun.

Riding to the outposts, he left his horse and moved away into the debatable land held by neither American nor Mexican. A young moon shone down on his shoulder, casting a faint shadow to his left and to his rear. It annoyed him. Turning to glance at it, he could not refrain from a fancy that a figure was following him. Looking straight ahead, he fixed his gaze on the plain, over which here and there grew scattered clumps of tropical trees.

It was lonely out there on that desolate plain where the poorest Mexican disdained to build even an adobe hut. The vipers with which the country abounds had crawled into their holes.

Despite his efforts to drive away the impression that his shadow was some one following him, this impression grew stronger. Turning again, he cast a quick glance behind. There was the shadow as before. Raising his eyes to the sky, he shuddered. The moon was behind a cloud.

It was now clear to Captain Duane that the mysterious follower was not his shadow. What was it? If a human enemy, it would have long before this shot or knifed him in the back. If a friend, why did it not declare itself? And why did he not hear its tread? He listened, but by the closest attention he could not detect a footstep. And why, he asked himself, did he, a soldier who had been twice brevetted for bravery, shrink from turning and confronting this mystical intensity of shade? It was the silence, a dread of something more than the dangers he had faced during the din of battle, that kept his eyes fixed to the front.

By an effort he gathered strength to turn his head for one more glance. There was the figure, more distinct than before, yet not continuously so. It seemed to Captain Duane that his eyesight was not capable of holding the image long enough to see exactly what it was. Now, for an instant, the head and shoulders would keep their form—the face bony, with deep sunken eyes—a broad, prominent mouth. Then the legs, long thin ones, would be tramping with one uninterrupted, unchanged gait, the whole covered by a long flowing mantle which fluttered in the wind, yet there was no wind.

Desperate, the officer halted and faced about.

"Who comes there?" he cried.

The words broke the stillness like a clap of thunder from a serene sky. There was in them a singular distress, as if they had been for ages asking a question to which there had come no reply. The figure stopped when the speaker stopped, standing, waiting, as though neither impatient nor tired, confident that the object of its attention would move on and it would again follow.

The young captain did move on. Though his physical strength was unimpaired, it seemed to him that his soul was lagging; that it was slowly but surely slipping away from him. He was as ready to meet an accustomed enemy and fight as bravely as ever. As Captain Allen Duane he was still independent; as a human soul he was losing himself.

And now there in the distance is something white. He shades his eyes from every ray of moonlight and discovers white tents. He is nearing the end of his mission. A few more miles and he will be within the picket line of a friendly army. Will this shadowy tramper remain behind?

Captain Duane pushed on. The inequalities of the road were no obstacles. He took no thought of running upon some roving band of Mexicans. The mysterious figure was closing upon him. At last it came so close that he could almost feel its breath, like the moldy chill from a tomb.

"Who comes there?" called the picket.

Why did not Captain Duane reply, "Friend with the countersign?" Was he dazed? Did he not hear? At that moment the shadowy follower towering above him bent and touched him on the shoulder. There was the crack of a rifle. The specter opened his arms, and the soldier as he fell was caught in the folded mantle. The follower was Death.

In the morning a body was seen lying without General Taylor's picket line. The officer of the picket went out and found an aid-de-camp on whose person was an important message. The picket had shot a friend.

... My ... Other Self

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

I live alone with my servants, a woman cook and a housemaid. I am fifty years old, tall for a woman and with grizzly gray hair. I wear glasses, and as I have trouble with one eye the glass before that eye is colored a light amber.

These details are necessary to an understanding of an incident I am about to relate.

One afternoon—or rather evening, for the day was fading—I went home after shopping, opened the front door with my latchkey and went upstairs to my room. The door was open, and a woman was standing before the mirror of the bureau powdering her face. I saw her reflection in the glass, and what was my astonishment to see myself. If I had any doubt the woman was I, it was dispelled by seeing that one of a pair of glasses she wore was colored and was amber.

While I was gazing at her she suddenly caught sight of me, and her face took on the same expression as mine. She was apparently as much astonished at seeing me as I was at seeing her. Indeed, she caught at the bureau for support. I felt very much like catching at something for support myself, but it occurred to me that I had better keep a grip on myself and retain my faculties that I might find out what this strange occurrence meant. Nevertheless I will admit that I was obliged to make a great effort to do so.

"Who are you?" I stammered.

"Who are you?" asked the other, looking ready to faint.

"I am Wilhelmina Buntling."

"No, no, no!" gasped the woman. You cannot be. I am Wilhelmina Buntling. Go away! Do, please, go away!"

I strained my eyes to discover some want of resemblance between the woman and myself. It was shortly before the time for lighting the lamps, and of course I could not distinguish minor parts as well as if I had seen her at noonday, but she was my height and build, had the same grizzly gray hair as I, with two short curls on each temple. But more convincing than all else was the amber colored glass before her left eye. And yet I doubt if this was more staggering than the fact that the woman seemed to be even more appalled at seeing me than I was at seeing her.

The first explanation that occurred to me was that I had been stricken with some brain trouble. But I had been feeling as well up to the very moment I saw this strange reflection of myself as I had ever felt in my life. And notwithstanding its appearance I now felt myself to be in a perfectly normal condition. I was conscious also that this woman was not a shade, but a person of flesh and blood. Perhaps it was this consciousness that enabled me to get my first grip on myself. I began to throw off the idea that I had brain trouble or disordered vision or anything of a physical nature that would cause me to see a double me. The woman's actions in that case should be an exact duplicate of mine. They were not. Her motions were not in unison with mine, though they were similar to mine.

Next came a suspicion that my double was playing me. As soon as I got control of my faculties I began to see that her actions were not altogether spontaneous. There was something forced in them. In other words, I realized that she was acting a part. At least I suspected she was. I had no theory as to what would induce her to do this. It simply seemed to me that she did it.

By this time I was in a condition to ask questions.

"When did you come here?" I asked.

"I came in about half an hour ago."

"Where from?"

"I had been—shopping."

She hesitated before speaking the last word. It seemed to me that she was deliberating what answer to make to my question. But I had been shopping myself, and the reply tended to disconcert me. However, by this time the woman had recovered some of her equanimity and seemed to me to be bracing herself for an examination. It suddenly flashed upon me that her appearance in my house was for a purpose. Quickly withdrawing, I stepped back into the hall and, pulling the door after me, locked it.

Whatever had been the woman's object—if indeed she were a real woman and had an object—she was a prisoner, for there was but one door to my bedroom, and there was no means for her escape. I staggered to the telephone and, calling a friend, told my story, somewhat incoherently, it is true, but managed to make her understand me. She came right over and after satisfying herself that I was of sound body and mind advised me to send for the police.

Well, the upshot of the matter was that the woman had seen me buying jewelry, of which I am fond, though I seldom decorate myself with it, and, noticing our similar personal appearance, decided to get herself up like me, impersonate me to the servants and myself if necessary and get away with some of my valuables. Her wearing a glass like the one I wore certainly put a finish on her makeup. When I came home she had all my jewels, but, hearing me come in, attempted the game I have described.

In a way her idea was quite a clever one, and she certainly almost succeeded in making me believe that something had jarred my brain, and for several days after I was haunted by a most disagreeable feeling of unrealness.

NAPOLEON'S MISTAKE

It was while Napoleon was fighting the English, that Fulton the inventor of the Steamboat, sought an interview with him for the purpose of interesting him in the project.

Napoleon wouldn't even see him.

It is now generally conceded that the steamboat would have enabled Napoleon to baffle the winds and tides of the English Channel, land an army in England, and defeat the English.

Perhaps you think a course in our school would be of no benefit to you.

But are you sure? Wouldn't it be worth while to find out?

Come in and talk it over with Mr. Catherman, or send for our catalog. No obligations.

I have know Mr. Charles S. Catherman for the past nine or ten years both as a teacher and as a superintendent engaged in commercial education.

Mr. Catherman is a gentleman of attractive personality, who, as a teacher commands the highest respect and regard of his pupils, not only because they enjoy his pleasing manner and attitude of absolute fairness, but also because they are impressed with his practical as well as theoretical knowledge of business subjects.

As a superintendent, Mr. Catherman enjoys the distinction of having developed what is considered by business men, the most efficient business college in the city of Baltimore. My own experience, together with that of many others known to me, is that he could always be depended upon to measure up in every way to whatever he promised a student or prospective pupil. A Russian Heroine

By F. A. MITCHEL

Anna Pavlovna was a Russian girl who lived near the border between Austria and Russia. Her father and brothers were in the Russian army fighting against the Germans and Austrians while Anna and her mother remained in their cabin home endeavoring to extract a living from the little patch of ground which surrounded it.

There came a time when the Russian army was driven back past their cabin and in due time an Austrian army advanced, taking up the position which had been held by the Russians. One day a general, followed by a member of his staff, rode up to the cabin. Dismounting he went in and looked about him. The cabin had but one story, but there were three rooms—a living room, a kitchen and a dining room. Going into the living room, the general told his aid to go to the generals under his command and tell them to come to him for a conference. The aid rode away, and presently the generals began to ride up to the cabin and join their commander in the living room.

It is nearly always cold in Russia—that is, where this part of the great world's war was going on, and Anna was directed to make a fire in a big stove that stood in the room. This she did, and the aid moved a table in the center of the room on which he spread maps. When half a dozen officers had joined the commander the door of the room they occupied was closed.

For three hours the men talked over a plan of attack for the next day. There was not the trench fighting in Russia there was in the west of Europe, and the attack was to be more like such warfare has been in past times.

At 10 o'clock in the morning one of the generals was to attack the Russian right flank. As soon as re-enforcements of the enemy had been drawn to that point another attack was to be made on the left flank. This was to be the main offensive, and the ground on that side being disadvantageous for the Russians, the attack there was to be persisted in till the flank was turned. Then a third bolt was to be launched on the center.

The commander took a pencil and a bit of paper and noted all these points, elaborating them so that there would be no mistake. This paper he gave to the aid with instructions to make a copy of what he had written for each one of his subordinates, that there should be no mistake through failure of memory. This was done. Then the commander called for the paper on which were his instructions and, that it might not fall into any one else's hands, opened the stove door, noticed that the fire within burned brightly, tossed the paper in and closed the door. Then the officers left the cabin and rode back, each to his own headquarters.

Later in the day Anna went into the living room to make it tidy after the occupation of the officers, who had left the dirt from their boots. She swept the floor, rearranged the furniture and, taking up the sweepings in a dustpan, opened the stove door to throw them in. Now the front of the stove lay a bit of paper, or rather fragment, for one-third of it had been burned. Anna took the paper out of the stove and saw writing on it. A very little of the writing had been burned. It was in the German language, so the girl could not understand what it was, but though she was only a peasant with little or no education, she surmised that it might be of importance to the Russian military commander.

She showed the paper to her mother, who, though she could not decipher the writing on it, agreed with her daughter that it might be of service to their countrymen. But when Anna proposed to try to make her way with it through the Austrian lines the woman could not at once consent, for she knew that if Anna were caught with it on her she would be killed at once.

The problem with Anna was how to conceal the paper. She finally decided to tear off all but the writing and roll it into a little ball. She would carry the ball in her mouth and if necessary would swallow it.

She left the cabin at nightfall to try and steal her way through the lines. She spent much time searching for a point where the line was thin, but failed to find such a place. But the soldiers slept, and by crawling through bushes she eluded them. The patrolling sentries were awake, but she watched till one of them had reached the far end of his beat and passed over it before he returned. Beyond the camp sentries were pickets, and these she succeeded in passing in the same way.

When about midnight she attempted to pass the Russian pickets she was fired at and wounded, but she cried out in Russian: "Let me pass. I bring news to your general." Then the picket came to her and helped her in.

She was taken to the headquarters of the commander, who was awakened by her conductor, and after telling her story she unrolled the paper she had and handed it to the general. He read it carefully, then, looking at his watch, exclaimed:

"It is past midnight. There is no time to lose. Call the men to arms and send the generals to me."

In the gray of dawn the Austrians came, but found their enemies ready for them. They were also ready for the feint on their flank, the attack on their center and the other flank. The consequence was that the Austrians were thrown into confusion and a rout followed.

Anna received a medal for her service. She would accept no other reward.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

Marriage License Twelve Years Old.

Judge Martin of the municipal court married a couple whose license had been obtained twelve years ago. Christopher C. Owens obtained a license to marry Miss Emma Brandy from County Clerk Philip Knopf on August 13, 1900. "We had a quarrel," he told Judge Martin, "and we didn't see each other for about eleven years. Recently we patched up the trouble."—Chicago Tribune.

Begin Well.

Finish every day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities, no doubt, crept in; forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.—Emerson.

GARRETT COUNTY MAN KILLS SELF

After Attempting To Murder His Wife By Shooting.

Tuesday night Albert LaRue, 28 years old, son of Richard LaRue, who lives near the Johnson Church at the foot of Little Savage mountain in this county, shot and seriously wounded his wife, Mrs. Verna LaRue, and then ran a short distance to a field near the National Pike, where he placed the gun under his chin and took his own life.

Mrs. LaRue was taken to the Miners' Hospital at Frostburg, where her injuries were dressed by Drs. J. C. Coby and W. O. McLane. It is not thought her injuries will prove fatal. The shooting occurred about 9 o'clock on the National pike, just west of Frostburg.

Mrs. LaRue was riding in a wagon with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Alexander, of Borden Shaft. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander had spent the day at the home of Mrs. Alexander's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Spiker, who live about a mile west of the Johnson Church in Garrett county, and Mrs. LaRue, who had left her husband last Thursday, was riding in the wagon with them. When they reached the Johnson Church, where a revival was in progress, they saw LaRue and his brother at the church. Mrs. Alexander called him over to the wagon and gave him a package containing some clothes that belonged to him.

According to Mr. and Mrs. Alexander they did not see anything more of LaRue until they neared the old toll gate along the National pike above Frostburg. By the light of a passing automobile Mrs. LaRue told her brother-in-law, who was driving the wagon, she saw her husband following them. A few minutes later he walked up behind the wagon and asked Mrs. LaRue if she would return and live with him. She replied she would not and told him she

What We Know, or Certainties in Religion.

In my last I closed with the thought, that Christ dwells in us, hence He is our life, this being true, the believer is there in Christ and, being in Him, many blessings are the result of this union.

One blessed result is, He is a new creature. Paul in 2 Cor. 5:17 shows this conclusively. He shows us very clearly that two things are necessary to our living to Christ, both of which are consequences of His dying for us, one is regeneration and the other is reconciliation.

"If any man be in Christ he is a new creature, says the Apostle. He must be. Some however read this, "Let him be a new creature." We should be very careful of this, wholly that we have a new name; a new suit, but that we have a new heart that is the essential thing. Grace works a wonderful change in the heart so that old things pass away, all becomes new. Old principles, old thoughts, old associations, old desires and inclinations are no longer pleasing to us, but we cast them aside for the better and purer, even the spiritual which come to us and which we are glad to entertain and practice. A new world, as it were, is opened up to us, for it has been formed in the soul by that grace which regenerates. The renewed man acts from new principles, he is governed by new rules, he has new ends to gain and he associates in new company and though in the world he is not of it.

Another result of this union, is that the veil is taken away in Christ. Paul teaches this in 2 Cor. 3:14, when he says, "But their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament. He infers from what he has said about the O. T.—the duty of plainess of speech.

Ministers should not, like Moses, put a veil on, that is they should not darken those things that ought to be made plain. The gospel is undoubtedly a clearer dispensation than the law. Types and shadows prefigured the things of God in the O. T. dispensation, but under the gospel it is revealed in Christ. Types and shadows are accomplished as the veil is done away in Jesus. Christ has come as the end of the law for righteousness to all them that believe and to Him Moses and the prophets pointed and of him they wrote.

A third blessing received is this, the believer speaks before God, he enters within the veil, he walks in a new way. No fiery vengeance ever prevents or deters him in coming. Hear Paul as he speaks to his Corinthian friends (2 Cor. 12:19) "Think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? We speak before God in Christ; but we do all things dearly beloved for your sakes. He is centuring them for what is faulty in them. They had not defended him as they should have done. He reminds them of his intentions and behavior toward them. He was not burdensome. He sought them only, not theirs or what belonged to them. He was not a self-seeker, or a Wilkins Macawber sort of a man who was always bidding for compliments or gifts, but he was independent enough to help himself, yet he did not hesitate to tell them that they owed the workmen his honest hire. They were ungrateful but in spite of that he loved them as much as ever notwithstanding their ingratitude and unkindness. Then after his kindly rebuke, he shows them his object. He did all things for edifying. He desired to do good, to lay a good strong foundation and upon that to carefully erect a good structure. He does not excuse himself to them for he has no thought of that. He simply says, we speak before God in Christ. That is saying a good deal, but he is sure of it. So do we now do the same thing. The Christian can come into the Holy of Holies. He can approach so near that his near access is inconceivable.

We also triumph in Christ. The same apostle, having given directions concerning excommunicated persons, turned aside to give an account of his travels and labors for the furtherance of the gospel. A door was opened to him of the Lord. Success attended his efforts. The hearts of the people were opened and now he speaks of these things as a matter of thankfulness and of rejoicing. "Thanks be to God who always causeth us to triumph in Christ."

So we today may say the same, He giveth us victory. The church can say so she is fearfully crippled in her influence and hindered in her work, by inconsistent and unworthy members by those who though prominent in her ranks, do not hesitate to break God's Sabbath when it suits them, who break the law of the land as well when they can make a dollar by so doing, and so the churches influence is weakened by the presence of so many unworthy members, but in spite of it all she is increasing and she is extending her work into all parts of the world. But the individual Christian who is living near his Master, may triumph over temptation in Christ. The believer is also blessed with spiritual blessing in heavenly places. The best of blessings he receives is Christ and the Holy Spirit. The sum of all blessings.

In heavenly places some say in the church as distinguished from the world, and called out of it. Or it may read in heavenly things such as come out of heaven and intended to prepare us for it and secure their reception into it. But these blessings belong to the heavenly kingdom and therefore they are the highest we can attain. The correct us with heaven.

The things that should claim our chief attention are spiritual, they are heavenly things beyond doubt. Some of these particular blessings are—ye are chosen of God. Ye are adopted into His family; ye are accepted through Christ, in your persons and services; your sins are washed away through the blood. The last blessing resulting from union with Christ, is we shall rise first in the resurrection. In 1 Thess. 4.16, Paul comforts those who mourn departed friends who die in the Lord. He designs to dissuade against excessive grief. Griet is lawful. We may weep for our loss though it is their gain, yet it must not be excessived. They are only asleep in Jesus and by and by when the Lord comes these shall rise first.

Here we rest for the present.

GRANTSVILLE.

One of the heaviest frosts known here for years appeared on Monday night and, as a result, gardens are almost completely devasted. Many householders had covered their garden crops with carpets, rugs, etc. until the back yards resembled nothing so much as a row of patch-work quilts, but, even so the deadly frost got in its work of destruction, and with the exception of a few protected vegetables, and those gathered the evening previous, the summer crops are lying waste and reveal considerable loss to most of the people.

Veteran W. H. Swauger's barn was burned on Tuesday night of last week, with all of its contents. The loss is about $1,000; insurance only $300. Mr. Swauger, who has given up farming since the death of his wife and is making his home with his son George in Johnstown, Pa., chanced to be at the farm when the fire occurred. The origin of the fire is unkhown, but is supposed to have been spontaneous combustion from the heating of hay stored too green. Mr. Swauger will not rebuild, as he is not keeping any animals on the farm any more, except a few sheep. He will make a sheep shed out of an old sugar camp and wash house. Mr. Swauger returned to Johnstown last Saturday.

School opened Monday morning with a fairly good attendance and the following corps of teachers: Principal, Prof. R. R. Sanner; assistant, Miss Katherine Crowe, of Frostburg; intermediate, Miss Zadie Browning of Oakland; primary, Miss Marie Connor. Miss Crowe and Miss Connor are each graduates of the Frostburg State Normal, and Miss Browning has been one of Garrett county's most successful teachers, and as Captain Sanner needs no introduction, it is needless to say that the Grantsville school is well equipped for a good year's work.

Messrs. Lester and John Warnick and the Messrs. Ziegler from Lonaconing, who have been camping at the Casselman dam gave a corn roast last Tuesday evening to a number of young people of the village.

Misses Beulah and Esther Bender entertained a number of friends with a corn roast, followed by a dance, at the pavillion on Friday night.

Iva Irene, the four-year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Klotz is suffering from infantile paralysis in a rather mild form. The home has been placed under qnarantine by Dr Darby, the county health officer, and the acute stage of the disease has been passed. The child seems normal except for the loss of the use of one limb.

Chas. Zehner, of Oak Grove, about four miles from here, broke one of his legs on Monday last while chasing a refractory heifer that had broken loose from confinement. Mr. Zehner slipped upon the wet grass and his limb was broken in two places between ankle and knee. He is resting as well as possible after the unfortunate accident.

Floyd Younkin, an employe of the State road force, met with a painful accident on Thursday by cutting himself in the right leg with an axe while in the performance of his duties. The limb was cut entirely to the bone, but after being dressed is healing nicely.

Mrs. Ida Hershberger spent part of last week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Yutzy, of Pocahontas.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Tharinger and the former's mother, from Milwaukee, Wis., spent several days last week with Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Bill.

Mrs. R. C. Bowen, John Zehner, Mrs. C. H. Bill, Misses Christine Winterberg, Carrie Dorsey, Wilda Getty and Marie Connor were among the many visitors to the Elk Lick Chautauqua last week.

Rev. and Mrs. L. N. Wilson, of St. Paul, were guests of Mrs. W. E. Stanton on Sunday.

Master Floyd Miller spent a few days in Somerfield with his sister, Mrs. A. T. Shirer.

Mrs. Stewart Rodamer spent Chautauqua week with relatives in Salisbury.

Mrs. Robert Gibson, of Somerset, Pa., and Mrs. Annie Mowry, of Stovertown have been guests of their father, Josiah W. Durst.

Edgar Roberts, of the firm of Klotz & Roberts, was in Cleveland, O., last week in the interest of the firm.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. J. Fischer are rejoicing over the arrival of a little son, born on Sept. 6th.

Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Bender spent their vacation with their respective parents at Springs, Pa., also taking in the Chautaqua at Elk Lick.

BLOOMINGTON

Mrs. Fannie Smouse, of near Oakland, was the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Adam Elliott, during the week.

Michael Flynn of this place and his daughter Mrs. Joseph Beeman, of Beryl, are spending the week in Baltimore visiting relatives.

Mr. Julius Renninger, of Oakland, was in town last week soliciting character members for a K of P Lodge at this place. We understand the required number was obtained without much trouble and the lodge will be instituted on the evening of Sept. 28th.

Hess Kohlstol, of Connellsville, Pa., is spending the week in town, the guest of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Minnie Tibbets.

The public school opened the fall term on last Monday morning, with Miss Williams, of Frostburg, as principal, and Miss Rowan, of Luke, assistant.

Mr. and Mrs. James Green, of Elkins, after a short visit to relatives in town, left for home Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Ella Swearinger, of Oakland, accompanied by her granddaughter, Miss Evelyn Welling, of the same place, are the guests of relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Markwood, of Elkins, are spending the week at Cross, visiting Henry Randall and other relatives in that neighborhood.

Miss Viola Durham, trained nurse, of Cumberland, was called to Barnum on Sunday to attend Mrs. Charles Paugh, of that place, who has been quite ill for the past few days.

Mr. Harry Coffman has been appointed post-master at Bloomington, vice Jacob Stump resigned. We understand Harry will assume the duties of the office about Oct. 1st.

Mr. Olin Fortney, mine foreman for the Bloomington Coal Co., for the past year or more, has accepted a similar position with the Big Vein Coal Co., Shaw, and will take charge of the mines at that place on Oct. 1st.

Mrs. Jacob Stump, of this place, accompanied by Mrs. Minnie Bush and Mrs. Howard Liller, left on No. 2 Wednesday morning for a short visit to friends in Winchester, Va.

Heavy frost and freezing weather in the mountainous regions of Chesnut Grove and Firm Rock destroyed all of the late vegetables in those neighborhoods.

Prof. Frank Rathbun, wife and little son, of Oakland, spent the week-end in town with relatives.

Mrs. H. M. Kamp and her son Paul, were visitors to Cumberland on Wednesday and took in the matinee at the Maryland.

The Protector of Finance

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

THE FOURTEENTH MAN

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

IT WAS a hard task that the president of one bank had given me. A standard financial institution is rarely desirous of doing business with a woman, at least beyond the mere depositor basis. In the present instance it was not only a woman, but a young and pretty one. Add to this the fact that the lady in question was in deep distress, that her case presented angles suggesting evasion and even mystery, and you will not wonder why every official of the bank from the president down to the assistant cashier had shied at the task which I was now obliged to shoulder.

"Do the best you can to get our money out of this muddle," the president had told me tersely, handing me the folder which contained all the papers in the case from the day, four years back, where Royal Ludington, member of the Board of Trade, had made his initial deposit with our bank down to and beyond the recent date of his sudden death. The record of his dealings with our institution up to the time of his demise was clear as crystal. A child could have read and understood, pretentious as to magnitude and importance as had been some of his dealings. Direct and margin accounts were cleanly attended to. There was not a mar or break in the admirable paying system of Royal Ludington. When death closed the account, however, we held his note unsecured for $37,950; and we held it still, past due, uncollectable, to our bewilderment, in any legal way.

I familiarized myself with all the details of the case through a hurried glance over the contents of the folder, tidied collar and coat with a twist of my hand, and put on my best banking face to enter the private office of the directors' room where I had been advised Miss Grace Ludington was awaiting attention.

"I came about this," she said in a tone child-like, confiding, slightly reproachful, all at once. The letter she handed me notified Mrs. Royal Ludington that the overdue paper of her dead husband required immediate settlement, rather strictly referring to the fact that no attention had been paid to previous notifications of the same fact. I turned it over and over in my hand, seeking to fix upon the manner I should assume in serving the best interests of the bank in dealing with an emissary instead of the chief person now in interest in the case.

"I see," I observed, trying to gain time, for I am not a ready diplomat; "but why did not Mrs. Royal Ludington—your mother—" the fair head bowed "—come herself?"

A wave of singular intensity crossed the face of the young girl. Her lips parted to speak. Then she subdued their expression. They quivered. Her eyes dropped, her cheeks grew the paler.

"She would not come," was spoken finally—"she will not come."

"Surely," I observed, "Mrs. Royal Ludington does not repudiate the obligation?"

"For the present—yes."

"Yet we have notations here that show transfers of property within the past month representing over $20,000. Aside from that two notes have passed through the bank for $10,000 which she has seen fit to pay promptly. Those notes were signed by your father, not by your mother. Why does she discriminate unfairly against the bank in caring for your father's obligations? I refer to the notes given by your father to one Abel Vandamann."

"My message, is," she said evenly, coldly, "that there are circumstances encouraging our fervent hopes, the possible relief of the bank, that you and ourselves must wait for—must."

It was her last word. With a motion of head and body that was all it should be, with the air of an empress she went from the room, and I stood staring blankly after her, analyzing every word she had said, weighing it, dissecting it, seized with a sudden inspiration and carrying it forthwith to the president of the bank. He was a man of few words and I lent myself to his system.

"It is simply—wait," I said.

He shrugged his shoulders, knowing I had done my full duty.

"No pressure possible, then, you think!"

"None at the present time. There is action possible, though," I said.

"You mean?"

"Resilius Marvel."

"Get him."

When the bank—or any other bank—said "get Resilius Marvel," it signified the abandonment of direction or opinion. It meant unrestricted power awarded Marvel, great man that he was—he, the brains, mouthpiece and active director of the great United Bankers' Protective association. Marvel was not a collector for the banks. He was the last resource, the final court of appeal in a case when the layman in investigatory science came face to face with a blank wall, threw up his cards, and left the game to an expert.

My friend listened patiently, but rather bored I fancied, to my tame story of what had seemed quite sensational at my first impetuous view of it. He made a brief notation now and then on a tab of paper of the dry details I gave him of the Ludington affair. I had brought the folder with me, the dossier in which the credit department was supposed to store up everything concerning a client and keep it up to date. As I closed it he asked the question:

"That is all you have?"

"Except the newspaper clippings referring to the death of Mr. Ludington," I replied.

The newspaper story was simple and plain. It was only because the circumstances were out of the ordinary and the decedent an apparently successful business man, that the public prints had given any space to the death of the exchange trader.

It was a chill March evening when he had been found dead, lying against a building. There was no evidence whatever that he had been assailed. The contents of his pockets were undisturbed. There were no marks of violence on his body. He carried no life insurance, but an autopsy was held by the coroner. The inquest developed nothing new. According to two expert physicians Royal Ludington had died from heart failure. He had been ailing and depressed for some time preceding his demise. There was not the slightest hint at suicide.

The police, tracing the movements of the decedent previous to his death, testified at the inquest that Ludington had been one of a small party of friends who had met at the home of Abel Vandamann. The latter was an apparently reputable business man of the city of some wealth and social standing. The occasion of the social function was the grouping up of a number of business men to whom Vandamann wished to present a stock selling scheme to float a copper mine in Northern Michigan. A pleasant evening had passed, a few cigars, not too much wine, and the guests had departed in pleasant humor and seemingly all in the best of health. Two of the guests had walked some distance with Ludington, and had bade him good night about a square and a half from the spot where his body was later discovered.

Mrs. Ludington had testified that she knew her husband to have had business dealings for a long time previous to his death with Mr. Vandamann. The latter she understood had loaned her husband money. This was not a new phase of the character of Vandamann. His business was that of a high interest rate note shaver, but he had been always shrewd enough to conceal his usurious transactions under the guise of expenses, commissions and the like.

This was the story told by the newspaper clippings I handed to Resilius Marvel. Pasted to it was a briefer item dated two days later. It had been preserved in the folder because it mentioned the name of Royal Ludington. It covered a strange happening. On the evening of the funeral of the dead trader, a man had been detected in leaving by the window route the room Ludington formerly occupied at his home. A watchman had trapped him as the midnight marauder dropped to the ground. He was held until the police were summoned and was sent to the nearest police station. Upon searching him nothing whatever was found upon him. He seemed to be some homeless tramp, he had taken nothing from the room he had entered, and when questioned declared with a foolish grin that he had been looking for something to eat, struck a sleeping chamber instead of a pantry, and was too honest to steal anything more than a bite of food.

The contention of the man was carried out in the main by circumstances. The room he had entered had not been at all disturbed. Upon the bureau lay the trader's purse with some money and papers in it. This had been opened, but nothing removed. A suit of clothes in a closet had been looked over, it seemed, but not even the pockets had been searched.

The marauder, giving the name of Edward Briggs, had been brought before a police magistrate, charged with vagrancy, and sent to the house of correction for sixty days.

I noticed that my friend read and re-read the little clipping telling all this. I noticed him mark on the pad the name—"Edward Briggs." I saw also that he copied the names of the two guests who had left the Vandamann home with the trader the night of his death. Then he arose, and I could tell by the expression of his eye that he was ready for work. Further, I regarded him with the admiration his ability always evoked within me, for although I could not guess how, I was sure that out of the bare skeleton fabric of an unpaid note at bank, a weeping girl and two newspaper clippings, Resilius Marvel had already discovered a diverging suggestion, direct and important.

"Drop around in the morning," he said casually. "You were right to bring this case to my notice."

I told the president of our bank this, later. In the light of past events in which Resilius Marvel had been concerned, that functionary smiled hopefuly as if he felt he had landed the burden of a distributing circumstance on helpful and reliable shoulders.

I found Marvel pacing the floor of his office in a thoughtful way, his hands clasped behind him, when I called the next morning. He drew out his watch and consulted it with a slight gesture of impatience, as though I had kept him waiting.

"Two minutes," he announced, "and then you will come with me. There is a person to find, and no time to lose."

"And the person?" I intimated.

I stared helplessly at Marvel. He kept up his restless walk, puncturing each step with a sentence rapid and enlightening.

"There was nothing unusual nor suspicious as to the social function which transpired at the Vandamann home," spoke Marvel. "There was no motive to it, no plan or anticipation of foul play. Get that clear in your mind in the first place. A strange thing occurred, however, just as the guests were about to be seated at the table. It was discovered that there were just 13 persons present."

I began to receive a glimmer of where a "Fourteenth Man" might come in.

"That arose which might readily arise where one man of a group is superstitious. Such a man was present—he was the man who died, Royal Ludington. He was probably in a mood for weird forebodings. Vandamann did not debate the point. He excused himself to his guests, put on his hat, went out into the street and apparently picked up the first man he met to break the hoodoo."

"And this man?" I asked.

"Known to none of them, apparently some city wreck on error's shore, a freakish contrast in his attire to the perfectly dressed guests, quietly took his place at the table, maintained the silence he was paid to maintain, ate like the hungry man he was, and then seemed to disappear, his paid mission executed."

"And you now seek to find this man?"

"He must be found," declared Marvel positively.

"Why?"

"Because I am satisfied he can explain the mystery in this case."

"There is a mystery, then?"

"A deep one. That matters not now. I wish to show you something. As a memento of the first meeting of the organizers of the Copper Queen Mining company, a flash photograph was taken. That is the group."

My friend drew from his pocket a card four by eight inches and held it before me.

"That is Vandamann," he explained, indicating the broker, whom I recognized—"that Ludington," I knew him, too. "That," and by some irony of fate the forlorn, frowsy figure at the far end of the table seemed to have been focussed more prominently than any of the others—"that is the Fourteenth Man."

I studied the face with interest. Its owner was apparently one of the stray waifs of the city to be picked up anywhere in the crowded center within a five minutes' walk.

"Come with me," directed Marvel.

He hailed a taxicab as we reached the street. It conveyed us to a police station in the residence portion of the city. I followed after my friend at his bidding as he went to the office of the captain.

Marvel named a date—it was the day of the funeral of Royal Ludington. He gave a name. It was Edward Briggs, the man arested at the Ludington home that same night. The official consulted the record book. He read its details ending with the sixty days' sentence of the prisoner.

"Photographed?" inquired my friend.

"So noted—No. 8796."

"That is all—thanks," nodded Marvel, and within ten minutes we were at the identification bureau.

"The Fourteenth Man—Edward Briggs," he observed, as No. 8796 was produced, and he held it beside the flashlight photograph of the Vandamann function. There was no doubt as to the conclusion he had arrived at. The faces were identical. I was wondering what all this was going to lead to while the bureau official was explaining that although only a misdemeanor had been charged against the prisoner, it had been thought best to take his picture for possible past and future reference.

Marvel went over to a phone and called up the house of correction. I had done some brief calculating in my mind. Edward Briggs had yet ten days of his sentence to serve, so we were in time, if that meant anything, I decided. We were not in time, I knew instantly, as my friend hung up the receiver with the words.

"Not there—pardoned out."

Our next visit was to the mayor's office. Marvel knew all the ropes. There was no indecision or waste of time in his procedure. There was no reluctancy on the part of the mayor's secretary in giving him access to all the records of the office.

I was close enough to the desk of the secretary to catch what was said. Edward Briggs had been sent to the house of correction on the day he appeared in court. On the one ensuing, he was pardoned out on the recommendation of Alderman Miles Ryner. Ah, here it was, observed the clerk—letter to the mayor from the councilman in question. Request that a pardon be granted as the criminal charge of housebreaking had not been pressed; introduces Mr. Abel Vandamann, a valued constituent, who would vouch for the general good character of Edward Briggs and practically accept parole conditions in behalf of the prisoner.

"That establishes something more than a mere incidental connection between these two men, I fancy," observed Marvel as we went outside again.

"And what of that—and what next?" I inquired.

"Well, when I locate our Fourteenth Man it will be a forward step, of course," observed Marvel. "We go back to the Ludington end of the chain now, however. Do you think you know the daughter of the house well enough to venture a call upon her?"

"For what purpose?" I inquired doubtingly.

"To induce her to come to my office."

I ruminated. I considered the effort to move Miss Grace Ludington from her stated position hopeless, and my friend knew instantly that so I thought. He went on, however, regardless of my opinion.

"You will inform Miss Ludington that it is vital that I should see her—two to four today. She had better come alone. Tell her that it has nothing to do with the money of the bank, that it is not a question of cash, but of—family honor."

I could not for the life of me imagine under what dark curtain Resilius Marvel was gazing, but there was an indescribably lucid accuracy in the broad hint that he was about to strike a note with the young lady that would influence her more than promises or threats. He suggested explicity, before I left him, the course I was to pursue in dealing with Miss Ludington. I went straightway to her home, lingered about its vicinity while framing the manner of my approach, and accepted the opportunity offered as she appeared with some letters in her hand to mail at the nearest letter box.

"I am not here in behalf of the bank, Miss Ludington," I stated concisely. "I come from a friend and a professional man who has been pursuing some investigation regarding the circumstances surrounding the death of your father. They are, he assures me, of sufficient importance to require your attention. You have heard of Resilius Marvel?"

"I have read about him," was the reply, shrinking and muffled.

"If you knew Mr. Marvel as I knew him, you would trust to his earnest desire to be always helpful," I continued. "He seeks only to protect the family honor."

"Stop!" cried Miss Ludington suddenly, sharply interrupting me, throwing aside her veil and presenting a colorless, defiant face. "What do you know—what does he know?"

"I—I, nothing," I stammered, fairly abashed at the resolute challenge—"he, everything, probably. From two to four—you will see him?"

"I will see Mr. Marvel," she said slowly, and passed on her way.

"She was adamant to every attack I made to win one intimation, the faintest clew as to what she and her mother are holding back," Resilius Marvel narrated to me the next morning. "This girl is spanning ten years of her life with the agony, the resolve of one. She is under some terrific stress, and there is some influence that is holding these two women under a dreadful thrall."

"She would tell you nothing?" I asked.

"Until the last, absolutely nothing, except to beg that I would not disturb a condition that only she and her mother could remedy. She arose to leave. Suddenly she fixed her eyes upon me. I saw her studying me as if to search me through and through. I noted the flush of some impelling force in her face. 'Mr. Marvel,' she said, 'you claim a wish to be helpful to us, and I believe you, but this is a case where help from your viewpoint, instead of assisting us, might precipitate a direful catastrophe. But you are said to be a man who can find where others fail, who from the shadow can evolve a reality. You can do something for us, imperative, vital. If you can inform us what we cannot learn—the whereabouts of a certain person—you will bring us nearer to the light for the end.'"

"And the person?" I inquired.

Resilius Marvel handed me a worn photograph. It was that of a woman loud of dress, bold of face, wicked of eye. She had a certain wild beauty, but her smile was that of one who lures only to destroy. On the reverse of the card were these words: "Always as now—Idalia."

I wondered what was passing in the mind of my friend at this new element injected into the Ludington case. He did not see fit to enlighten me. He called for me at the bank the next day.

"A witness is sometimes handy," he observed, and as we went spinning along the boulevard south he briefly told of his success in locating this new woman in the case.

"The name of the photographer was a guiding clew," he advised me. "He did not know 'Idalia,' but he knew a friend of hers, an actress. From this friend I learned the whereabouts of the original of the picture. She is the inmate of the reformatory, on a sentence for robbery. We are going there."

A woman clad in light blue cotton uniform was called to us, after we had reached the place in question. She came into the room where we awaited her, her eyes roaming everywhere in an attempt to surmise the motive of our visit. Promptly Marvel drew the photograph Miss Ludington had supplied him from his pocket.

"I have come to ask you a question," he said. "How long have you known the man to whom you gave this photograph?"

In an instant the prison restraint, the forced reserve of discipline, all self control went to the winds. The woman first attempted to wrest the picture from the hand that held it towards her to tear it to atoms. Her eyes glared like a tiger's, her face became distorted, she raved, she trembled from head to foot, she poured out curses upon the man a memory of whom the photograph had evoked.

"Listen," she cried. "Mark me, I swear it!—the day I am freed from here, be it when it may—I will kill him!"

"You are too late," observed Marvel quietly.

"I am too late?" she repeated, skeptically.

"Yes, he has been dead for weeks."

She laughed, this Idalia, this woman who made men shrink whom she did not cause to weep.

"You came to draw me out, to delude me," she scoffed. "From him! I see through you. Dead? Do you think I do not keep track of him through my friends on the outside, to be ready to know when, and where, and how I shall strike when the hour comes? Go back and tell Abel Vandamann that from me."

A low whistle, so low that it would have been difficult to trace its source, proceeded from the lips of Resilius Marvel. He restored the photograph to his pocket. He made a motion to the attendant that his mission was accomplished. He said to me:

"The case is complete."

What he meant I groped vaguely in my mind to find out. He left me to think out one fact; that the photograph was the property of Abel Vandamann, not of dead Royal Ludington. Then how had it come into the possession of his daughter?

The great man proved his last statement to me the following evening. I was seated in the office of the United Bankers' Protective association when there came a commotion in its ante room. Then a man was thrust into the private office by two officers in uniform. Marvel followed, and the one policeman retired at his words:

"I will be responsible for this man. Now then, my friend, sit down and get your breath."

At a glance I knew the prisoner. It was Edward Briggs. He was frowsy, unkempt, savage looking, somewhat the worse for drink, and of lowering brow and set pugnacious lips.

"What's all this?" he growled out.

"You have been arrested for deadly assault upon one certain Vandamann," observed Marvel.

"It would have been more certain if I'd had the show," retorted the fellow.

"Did you hurt him much?"

"Worse luck, no. The next time!"—the man glared across his knotted fist.

"On top of your last exploit," remarked Marvel, "it may be six months or a year this time. Unless you have left a case of mayhem behind you down at Vandamann's, I can promise you a chance to get out of this mix-up—on conditions."

"What conditions?" muttered the fellow, an evil eye fixed on both of us—suspicious and leery.

"As the Fourteenth Man—"

"What's that!" ejaculated Briggs with a start, and then he shrank back within himself, the barrier up, like a man in a trap.

"As the Fourteenth Man, you of course knew Royal Ludington."

"Suppose I did?"

"What did you take to his house the day of his funeral?"

Briggs bored into the questioner's face with his shrewd ferret eyes. He shook his head. "This is some kind of a frame-up," he declared. "I don't say a word till I know what's doing."

After some persuasion the man told. It amounted to this: Scoundrel-hearted Abel Vandamann had seen an opportunity in the sudden death of one of his victims to press fictitious claims. He had utilized the Fourteenth Man in his plot. This had been to have Briggs visit the Ludington home surreptitiously, place the photograph in a pocket of Ludington's coat, and in his desk a card bearing notations of various amounts. These, corresponded in amounts to alleged notes of the decedent, were later presented to his widow for payment.

The wily schemer had convinced Mrs. Ludington that he held notes—they were forgeries—to a large amount, given him by her husband. He had further persuaded her to believe that the borrowed money they represented had been squandered in gambling and in financing the extravagant whims of the woman, Idalia.

The notations, the photograph, all seemed to verify the foul misrepresentations that brought sorrow and dread to the wife and daughter of the dead trader. Mrs. Ludington was a proud woman. The fear of disgrace, publicity, had made her the easy victim of the arch swindler, Abel Vandamann.

The demands of the broker were so extensive that his black-mailed victim found that after she had sacrificed her personal belongings to satisfy the notes, there would be no hope of liquidating the indebtedness at the bank.

Resilius Marvel held a brief but productive interview with Abel Vandamann the next day. Then he carried to the bank twelve forged notes for $50,000, and a like amount in cash already extorted from Mrs. Ludington on similar forgeries. The bank therefore, lost nothing, and the Ludingtons were restored to fortune and lifted from the shadow of a great grief.

"There is such a thing as earthly retribution," observed Resilius Marvel to me one day.

A column in a daily newspaper was the basis of the remark. It told of the murder in cold blood of Abel Vandamann. A stiletto had dealt him his death wound, so it might have been a woman. But his strong box was rifled, so it might have been a man. The police never found out, for the woman, Idalia, and the Fourteenth Man had disappeared as completely as though the earth had opened and swallowed them up.

"SHE WOULD NOT COME," WAS SPOKEN FINALLY-"SHE WILL NOT COME."

Now Make Dried Soup.

One of the beneficial effects of the recent scare over a threatened shortage of tin cans was an extended investigation into other possible methods of preserving food. The canned soup manufacturers were among the most earnest seekers, for they were threatened with having their tin supply cut off at an early date. They have worked out a process for putting up a dried soup in powdered form in containers of heavy wax paper. Similar systems of drying and packing vegetables are already in use in Europe, but the soup idea represents American enterprise. Apparently, it will not come on the market, because tin cans are going to be more plentiful than was anticipated.

"Getting By the Editor."

Getting by the editor is the most fascinating of indoor sports, says a writer in the Atlantic. When I was a journalist in the Freudian sense (that is, as an unfulfilled wish), my chum and I devised a way to get money for all our articles. Each agreed when he sent out a "story" to bet the other the price of the "story" that it wouldn't be accepted. That little arrangement took the sting out of a rejection completely; and when you lost your pay, you had the glory of the acceptance. Why and how the scheme broke down, I shall not divulge.

Could Do His Part.

Frederick the Great heard of a Silesian clergyman who had a reputation of communicating with the spirits.

He sent for him and received him with the following question:

"Can you call up ghosts?"

"At your pleasure, your majesty," replied the clergyman, "but they won't come."

To the . . . Selected Men

We who must serve in routine ways at home
Are somehow envious of you who go
To fit yourselves for war against the foe
Who challenge the world across the foam!

For yours is high adventure, you will face
Great moments; you will dare the rumbling guns,
Amid the roar tumultuous that stuns,
While men lock arms in murderous embrace.

You will know war's tremendous heights of glory,
You will know war's stupendous depths of pain,
You will take part in all the rack and strain
Of earth's remarking—you will LIVE the story.

That we shall only READ. And while we fret
At humdrum tasks that have no thrill at all,
You have answered to the nation's call
Will do great deeds that men shall not forget.

You will fight nobly, all your hearts afire.
With battle's exalteration flaming high,
And if grim fate decrees that you must die
You will have known the death brave men desire.

So we who serve in mine and farm and mart
Wish you "god speed" and envy you your part.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES.

The average male monarch of the day may fit snugly into Hamlet's description of his uncle as a king of shreds and patches, but queens—well, queens are different! The female of the species is more royal than the male, if royalty consists in a talent, mounting to the status of a genius, for making trouble. In fact, one might go so far as to point out that the exalted gentlemen who loll on thrones in our half-medieval twentieth century world are dangerous in exact proportion to the ambition of their wives.

Witness King Gustav of Sweden, a mediocre man, and Queen Victoria, a really promising intriguer. The able queen, acting through her amiable lord and master, has pulled wires on behalf of her relatives in der Vaterland which for a time resulted in a vast amount of solid comfort and more or less tangible aid for Germany. And then, womanlike, she made too good a job of it. Her Power-Behind-the-throne diplomacy set too high a standard. In reaching for the stars of perfection she tumbled down in a heap from her 'steenth story window on the asphalt pavement of a great failure. In other words, it was disclosed by an unfeeling American secretary of state that she had made Sweden's ambassadors the lackeys for the diplomats of the home brand of Kultur-Frightfulness. The jeweled hands which pulled wires to jerk her royal manikin have ended by setting up a commotion that is rocking a throne. Sweden is in ugly enough mood over the revelations to discuss a republic.

Queen Sophie, wife of Constantine of Greece and sister of the Kaiser, plotted the crown off her husband's head. The German czarina provoked the abuses which has given the czar a residence in Tobolsk. Perhaps Constantine and Nicholas had something to do with their fates, but the fact remains that at a distance they seem to have been much like clay in the hands of the potter.

Well, anyway, royalty of today is outwardly respectable. Kings at least find their rulers by their own firesides and not, as in the interestingly wicked days of yore, among the charming ladies in waiting. We have no Madame du Barrys with power to make their whims decide the destinies of nations. No Aspasia usurps the inalienable right if the wedded wife to make a fool of her lord. We have got by the stage where a Babylonish woman can declare war to avenge an epigram.

Let us be thankful for small favors. The modern king may be weak from the chin up, but at least he is sensible enough of his connubial duties to give exclusive rights to exploit his asininity to his own wife.

Bible Reference on the War.

Pocahontas Times.

In time of war men have always turned to the Bible for hope and comfort and justification. A great deal has been said since this war started about the prophecy in Revelation, chapter 13, in which it is said that the power of the beast would continue for forty-two months. This is the power about whom the people ask themselves as to who is able to make war with him? The power who was given a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies. The vials of wrath are poured out and the people are all gathered together at a place called Armageddon, where the good would fight against the evil and overcome it.

Taking the Bible to have been intended for all the world, the present war is the first war the world ever saw, that was not local in its nature. With China coming into the war, there is not a foot of the world in a broad belt in the northern hemisphere that is not actively engaged in the war. Only in a day of steam, telegraph and other space killers would such a war be possible, and it is the only time that there could be a gathering together of all the world at Armageddon.

There is no disputing the fact that for many years certain forecasters made abstruse calculations and preached that a war would commence in the year 1914 that would engage all the nations. To our own personal recollection this was foretold twenty-odd years before the breaking out of the war.

Under the forty-two months rule the end of the war is predicted for February, 1918. This counts forty-two months from the time that the German Emperor threw his million of troops into action like a man starting a locomotive with a lever.

Our attention has been called to another verse in the Bible, this time in the Old Testament, which bears out the forty-two months prophecy in a most singular manner. Look at Daniel 12:11.

And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.

This places the end of the war on February 11, 1918, counting from the date of the declaration of war against Servia.

Daniel was about the last of the prophets. Commentators have never been able to identify the time to which he refers except that most of them take it for granted that he referred to Israel. He describes it. "And there shall be a time of trouble, such as there was since there was a nation even to that same time. It is this period of trouble such as never was that was to endure the 1290 days.

The 12th verse says: Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and forty-five days. By the same reckoning, March 28, 1918, is the day that the blessing will come.

Four Clerks of Courts are to be elected in Maryland this fall. George Carey Lindsay, Clerk of the City Court of Baltimore City, has been renominated by the Democrats, and former Congressman Charles R. Schirm is the Republican candidate. The counties electing Clerks are Queen Anne's, Garrett and Charles. In Queen Anne's Clerk William F. Watson's term expires, and J. Fletcher Rolph won in the Democratic primaries over two competitors. The nomination is equivalent to an election, as only once has the nominee on the regular ticket failed to win, and that was when the late Samuel Seney ran as an independent against "Johnnie" George, whose renomination under the old convention system had split the party. Seney got a heavy Democratic vote which, added to the sparse vote in the county of the Republicans, enabled him to beat the "boss." Clerk Edward Z. Tower of Garrett was again nominated by the Republicans in a country that is as rock-ribbed for the G. O. P. as Queen Anne's is for the Democrats. In Charles Joseph Hubert Howard is the Republican nominee. Francis B. Matthews is the incumbent, by appointment of the Seventh Circuit Bench, and is expected to be the nominee against Howard. He ran in 1915 against the late Conrad Posey, who beat him by only 40 votes in that strong Republican county.—Baltimore News.

CHARLES B. GETTY.

Grantsville Resident Killed By Train at Cumberland.

The Cumberland News of last Friday morning gave the details of the tragic death of Charles B. Getty, of Grantsville, who was killed in Cumberland on Thursday when he was struck by a locomotive while attempting to cross the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Harrison street. The News's account of Mr. Getty's death is as follows:

"Charles B. Getty, aged 48 years was instantly killed late yesterday when he was struck by a Baltimore and Ohio engine at the Harrison street crossing.

"Getty attempted to cross the tracks, it is alleged, when the engine was approaching and failed to heed the warning of the flagman at the crossing. It is said that when he persisted in crossing the track, the flagman grabbed at him, and was himself almost drawn in front of the engine. After the man was struck he was dragged for a distance of about 30 feet under the engine. It required nearly an hour to extract the body from underneath the engine. The body was taken to the Butler morgue in the Butler ambulance and prepared for shipment to Grantsville.

"Mr. Getty was the husband of Mrs. Sara Roberta Getty, the well-known writer of Grantsville. At one time he was a telegraph operator in the Frostburg office of the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad, going from there to Grantsville where he was operator for many years. Recently he had been employed at Pinto, by an orchard company. He had come to this city yesterday with the intention of returning to his home in Grantsville.

"He is survived by his wife and two daughters, Mrs. Edmund Reppert, of Hepzabie, W. Va., and Miss Margaret at home. Alvin F. Getty, bookkeeper in the First National Bank, of Cumberland, and J. O. Getty, cashier of the State Bank at Grantsville, are brothers."

The Ashby Reunion.

On Saturday, September 8th, and Monday, the 10th, members and friends of the Ashby families met in Frank Ashby's picnic grove near Crellin for their first reunion. More than one hundred persons were present on the two days.

Music was rendered by the Ashby band composed of Ernest Ashby, Jesse Ashby, Dwight Ashby, Dorsey Ashby, Mrs. Grace Ashby Smith and Mrs. Joseph D. Ashby.

Appropriate hymns and vocal selections were sung by Mrs. Margaret Shaffer Knotts, Mrs. Grace Ashby Smith, Costanza Ashby Blake, Ernest Ashby, Dorsey Ashby and Jesse Ashby.

The two days were spent in social talks, telling stories of the early Ashby families and in looking over old relics. Those attending from a distance were Thomas W. Ashby, of Elkins, W. Va. and Joseph D. Ashby, wife and son, of Washington, D. C.

A permanent organization was formed, to be known as the Ashby Clan, and reunions are to be held each year on the second Saturday in August. J. Frank Ashby, of Crellin, was elected president, and Joseph D. Ashby, of Washington, D. C., secretary.

The organization will endeavor to search out and make a permanent record of data pertaining to the early Ashby families.

ESTABLISHED 1884

Mr. Farmer, Listen!

During the Fair we will sell you Farm Machinery (such as we have a good stock of) for less than the market price today.

We have the assurance that machinery of all kinds will be very much higher in price for 1918 than present prices, owing to the high price of steel and labor.

Machinery as yet has not advanced in proportion to the price of steel that enters into the making of same.

We have a good stock of Mowers, Rakes, Tedders, Grain Drills, Manure Spreaders, (wide spread) a few Olive Plows and a nice stock of Wagons on hand.

We will give next year's terms on Harvesting Machinery. We think we are safe in saying that Binders will be $200, Mowers $75 or $80, Rakes $40, and all other machinery in proportion for 1918.

Whether you buy of us or not our advice is to get your machinery for next year now.

Remember the Place and that

BOTH PHONES PROMPT SERVICE

Mr. Miller Thanks the Voters.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett County:

I take this means of extending my thanks to the Republican voters of the county for the support they gave me at the primary election held on Tuesday, September 11th, and solicit their further favors at the general election to be held in November.

Very respectfully,
HENRY P. MILLER,
Republican Candidate for County Commissioner.
Grantsville, Sept. 18, 1917.

BOTH WERE DENTED

New Ford As Well As Large Bankroll.

The Cumberland News of Tuesday printed the following anent the visit of two Preston county, (W. Va.,) residents to that city:

Jehu Liston is as important in Valley Point and continguous territory in fair old Preston county, West Virginia, as suspenders to a tall, thin man.

"Jehu owns the big farm just north of the town. The town doesn't hide much of the fertile farm either, for outside of the general merchandise store where moving pictures are shown every other Saturday evening from 8 to 9 o'clock in the auditorium on the second floor and the most profitable line is Peruna, there is little excitement in Valley Point. Jehu has one son, William, a healthy buckwheat fed youth and a Ford, the latter just acquired after harvesting showed a tidy little sum to the Liston credit in the bank.

"Good old Preston county buckwheat and sausage is mighty fine food, according to no less an authority than Thomas Cale, the baseball expert who is a native of those verdant West Virginia hills. But even the natives tire of buckwheat and sausage and moving pictures "eoow," as they say in the classified advertisement department. Jehu Liston and his son William got that tired feeling just last Sunday. They looked over the muchly thumbed album and read the Preston Republican again and locked the Ford in and it was only seven o'clock. So father suggested to son that they go to the city next day for a little trip, on their annual trip and, gosh how they did dread it. Yesterday they came 71 miles over the hills to Cumberland and paid $40, all told, in police court and returned to Preston county and buckwheat and sausage until another harvesting. They almost ruined their new Ford what with hitting an express wagon on Centre street and a sister Ford on Baltimore street which cost the elder Liston $15 for damages while William paid $25 on a state charge of being too bibulous to father a Ford around these busy streets."

Appointed Notary.

Governor Harrington has appointed and commissioned John C. Forman notary public for Crellin, this county.

Finger Amputated.

James Sisler, of near Corinth, son of Jacob Sisler, had the fourth finger of his right hand so badly injured Saturday evening when it was caught in a sprocket wheel of a threshing machine he was operating that amputation of the digit was necessary, the operation being performed by Dr. McComas Saturday night.

TO BID SOLDIER BOYS GODSPEED

A. D. Appleton.

Presentation of Testaments, Rev. S. E. Wicker.

Address, Rev. J. C. Ely.

The talks by the speakers will be limited to not more than ten minutes and these will be interspersed with music by the Oakland Orchestra.

In addition to the above the management of the Empire Theatre is arranging to have an extra program of moving pictures for this particular evening.

The comfort kits to be presented each man will contain toilet articles which will include a razor.

The testaments will be presented by a private resident of the town who has ordered them shipped from the publishers in New York. The books are attractive, compact, readable and durable, strongly and neatly bound in khaki colored Morocco grained keratol, waterproof, and beautifully embossed with an American Flag on the outside front cover. They are made to fit the pockets of the uniforms.

The town will be decorated with flags on business houses as well as on private residences, is the request of the committee and the Red Cross.

It is the desire that every individual resident of Oakland assist in making the farewell to the soldiers a success in every particular and this can be done with comparatively little effort if everyone will do his or her bit.

Give the boys the best you have, they deserve it. We who cannot go should add what we can to make them comfortable and to give them a few hours' pleasure before they undertake the real stern realities of what is before them.

PROSPECTS GOOD FOR OAKLAND'S BIG FAIR

Mammoth Show Will be Held Oct. 2, 3, 4 and 5.

The Oakland Fair which will be held on the above dates, has a promising outlook for a big crowd.

The association is desirous of making the Fair usually fine and large this year, and to this end wish to awaken as extensive a personal interest in it as it is possible to do.

We believe the citizens of Garrett county are our friends, and also recognize the fact that their influence, if exerted, will be the means of gaining us other friends and patrons, thereby insuring a successful fair, which means much to Garrett county.

We cordially invite the citizens and patrons to prepare something to exhibit in at least one of the many departments, for which we are offering very liberal premiums; or if they cannot do so, we trust every man, woman and child in Garrett county and the surrounding country will arrange to attend one or more days at least, and thereby arouse an interest that will bring us the success we are striving for.

Come to the Oakland Fair and find clean amusement and profit.

WILL NOT SEIZE HOME FOODS

Government Issues Denial of Report That It Is Going to Commandeer Housewife's Pantry.

There is no truth in a widely circulated statement that the Government expects to take food supplies from any family. Both the Food Administration and the Department of Agriculture join in a statement to counteract what seems to be a deliberate propoganda to the effect that the Government intends to take from every family all canned goods put up in excess of 100 quarts.

This is only one of the variations of the rumor, which has been widely circulated. Another statement is that the Government has been urging the canning, drying and preserving of fruits and vegetables so that they will be in a convenient form for the Government to handle and transport when it takes them away from the people. Further elaboration is that these goods are to be taken away from the American homes and shipped to England.

In one instant a motorist stopped at a farmhouse to fill the radiator of his automobile. In the course of conversation he casually inquired whether the farmer's family was canning all the surplus fruits and vegetables in order to help conserve the food supply. He was informed that the farmer was not doing so because the Government intended to take all the canned goods away except a small part of it actually needed by the farmer itself.

The authorities state emphatically that no such course has ever been contemplated by the Government. On the contrary, both the Department of Agriculture and the Food Administration are strongly urging housewives to can and preserve, especially at this time, all surplus fruits and vegetables in order that the households themselves may have a cheap and plentiful supply of food.

Dry Time is Near.

Saloonkeepers in Washington, D. C., have just 37 days more to keep their places open, the dry law going into effect on November 1. The general opinion is that Baltimore dealers will do a thriving mail order business, the wet goods to be sent over either by trolley or by railroad. It may be necessary at first to have a booze special to supply Washington, dealers stated, and they predict that a large business will be done particularly in beer.

IN BED FOR WEEKS

Mr. Smith Was in a Bad Way, But Doan's Restored Him to the Best of Health.

In April, 1916, Louis Smith, 90 New St., Hackensack, N. J., said: "Words fail to describe the misery I endured from kidney complaint. In my work I have to do a lot of heavy lifting and this weakened my kidneys. At first I only suffered from a slight backache, but almost before I knew it, I was all bent over like a man a hundred years old.

Mr. Smith.

"I began to grow worse as the days passed and finally I had to take to my bed where I remained for weeks. My head pained terribly and my back just throbbed. I was always dizzy and it seemed as if everything was whirling. Little black specks came before my eyes and I also suffered from painful and scanty passages of the kidney secretions. Everything seemed dark and dreary.

"Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured me and I am enjoying the best of health now."

"Sworn to before me."
E. M. Johnson, Justice Peace.

On March 19, 1917, Mr. Smith added: "I will never forget what Doan's have done for me. Whenever I catch cold on my kidneys, I can depend on Doan's to fix me up all right."

Surgical Stupidity.

A French soldier had been shot in the leg and was taken to the hospital for treatment. For some time the surgeon probed the wound, until at last the sufferer demanded what he was doing.

"I am trying to find the bullet," was the reply.

"What stupidity!" cried the patient. "Why, I have it in my pocket."

Something Lacking.

For the first time Louis was hearing the cherry-tree-and-hatchet story. It was very dramatically related by a patriotic aunt, but Louis was not so deeply impressed as he might have been. When the climax was reached and George Washington said, "I cannot tell a lie," Louis displayed his first glimmer of enthusiasm.

"Couldn't he?" he asked. "What was the matter with him?"—Philadelphia Star.

A Reasonable Supposition.

The farmer alleged a freight train of the defendant company had hit one of his mules.

"Now, Mr. Jones," said the attorney for the corporation to the aggrieved party, who occupied the witness stand, "will you kindly tell the court whether or not your mule was on the track, the property of the defendant, when hit by the train?"

"Well, sir," replied Mr. Jones, "I didn't witness the occurrence, but I suppose things must have been about as you say. This was a pretty bright mule and I reckon if that train had took out after him in the woods which fringe the track there where he was killed he would have got behind a tree."—Macon Telegraph.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 9

BENEFITS OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1.

GOLDEN TEXT—But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank—Daniel 1:8.

The book of Daniel, with the great prophecies, fulfilled and unfulfilled, is one of the most interesting and important in the Bible. Without a grasp of the prophecies of this book it is absolutely impossible for one to know the New Testament and the times in which we live. Daniel gives an outline of the entire period of time from the passing of supremacy to the Gentiles in Nebuchadnezzar to the final overthrow of the Gentile dominion, to the establishment of the millenial kingdom. The course, character and end of Gentile dominion are given. It is that period known in Scriptures as the "times of the Gentiles" (Luke 21:24).

The book of Daniel falls into two parts: Part I (chapters 1 to 6), in which the prophet appears as the divinely chosen interpreter of dreams; part II (chapters 7 to 12), in which the prophet appears as the mouthpiece of God, setting forth in visions, not dreams, the times of the Gentiles. The book is written in two languages, Hebrew and Aramaic—chapter 1:1-2.3 and chapters 8 to 12 (Hebrew); chapters 2:4-7:28 (Aramaic). The part which concerns the Hebrews was written in their own tongue and the part which concerns the empires of the world is written in their tongue.

I. Daniel's Home Leaving (vv. 1-4). He was carried away to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar in the first siege of Jerusalem. This was a great trial for his own heart. He seems to have been about fourteen years of age.

II. Daniel's Trials and Difficulties (vv. 5-13). It was the custom for the best of the captives to be selected and trained for service in the land of captivity. They usually selected those of the royal house for such training.

1. Change of name. Among the Hebrews names were given to children, which were significant. Daniel means "God is my judge." The significance of the name then was that all problems of life were submitted to God for decision. This was the secret of Daniel's life. This purpose of his parents seems to have been instilled into his very life and being. So thoroughly did he imbibe this spirit that in all things he made God arbiter of his plans and purposes. The object no doubt in the change of name was to obliterate his national and religious connection and identify him with the heathen people. The king of Babylon evidently liked Daniel's appearance and scholarship, but was averse to his religion. It is the same today. Nations and individuals are perfectly willing to recognize and utilize the scholarship and efficiency of Christian ministers and missionaries, but are not willing to embrace their religion.

2. His conscience tested (vv. 5-8). It was with reference to the king's meat and the king's wines. It is ever to be borne in mind that conscience is the groundwork of human character. It is the law which must be followed. No doubt Daniel was taunted and laughed at for his fidelity, just as all men and women today who are loyal to their convictions must experience, for all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

3. His religious life. This involved his refusal to eat meat and drink wine which was contrary to his teaching. Also it involved his praying three times a day.

III. His Success (vv. 14-21). 1. Physical health (v. 15).

Godly and temperate living pays. The king's meat and wine would have been pleasant to the palate, but would have meant compromise of conscience.

2. Mental growth (v. 20). He was ten times superior to his comrades. It is always true that those who abstain from indulgence in the use of wine have clearer minds and are mentally better equipped for their work than those who indulge.

3. Social. Daniel stood before the king. No higher position of honor could have been given him.

4. Temporal. He became president of the College of Wise Men and prime minister of the nation. This position he continued to hold through several dynasties.

5. Spiritual (v. 17). Because of Daniel's loyalty to God, Nebuchadnezzar's dream was revealed to him and he was giving visions sketching the whole history of the world.

IV. The Secret of His Success. The following may be set down as the things which made Daniel successful:

1. He was conscientious. If we would succeed in the world, let us see to it that in all things we live in good conscience.

2. Loyalty to God. He made God the judge of everything that pertained to his life. No pleasure was indulged in or problem disposed of without its submission to God.

3. Decision of character. With him that which had been submitted to God and was shown to be right before God, was the law of his life.

It was while Napoleon was fighting the English, that Fulton the inventor of the Steamboat, sought an interview with him for the purpose of interesting him in the project.

Napoleon wouldn't even see him.

It is now generally conceded that the steamboat would have enabled Napoleon to baffle the winds and tides of the English Channel, land an army in England, and defeat the English.

To Whom It May Concern:

I have know Mr. Charles S. Catherman for the past nine or ten years both as a teacher and as a superintendent engaged in commercial education.

Mr. Catherman is a gentleman of attractive personality, who, as a teacher, commands the highest respect and regard of his pupils, not only because they enjoy his pleasing manner and attitude of absolute fairness, but also because they are impressed with his practical as well as theoretical, knowledge of business subjects.

As a superintendent, Mr. Catherman enjoys the distinction of having developed what is considered by business men, the most efficient business college in the city of Baltimore. My own experience, together with that of many others known to me, is that he could always be depended upon to measure up in every way to whatever he promised a student or prospective pupil. The success in business of the great majority of his students attests the high degree of efficiency obtained by the school under his direction.

Very respectfully,

Entrance Examinations

STATE SCHOLARSHIPS IN ENGINEERING COURSES

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION for the Department of Engineering, as well as for the College of Arts and Sciences, will be held in Gilman Hall, September 17-20, 1917, beginning at 9 A. M. each day.

APPLICATIONS FOR SCHOLARSHIPS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING, established under the provisions of the Laws of Maryland, Chapter 90, 1912, will now be received. If there is more than one applicant for a particular scholarship, a competitive examination must be taken Friday, September 21, 1917, beginning at 9 A. M. Appointments will be made soon after.

Each Legislative District of Baltimore City and each County of the State, with the exception of Caroline, and Somerset Counties, will be entitled to one or more scholarships for the year 1917-1918, in addition to those which have already been assigned. In the two counties mentioned above, all the available scholarships have been awarded.

Under the provisions of the Act of Assembly, the County and City Scholarships in the Department of Engineering are awarded only to deserving students whose financial circumstances are such that they are unable to obtain an education in Engineering unless free tuition be granted to them. The scholarships entitle the holders to free tuition, free use of text-books, and exemption from all regular fees. THE EXPENSE OF ATTENDANCE FOR THOSE WHO DO NOT RECEIVE SCHOLARSHIPS IS NO GREATER THAN AT OTHER MARYLAND INSTITUTIONS.

Scholarships may be awarded to graduates of Loyola College, St. John's College, Washington College, Western Maryland College, Maryland Agricultural College, Mt. St. Mary's College, Rock Hill College, and one scholarship will be awarded "At large."

Applicants should address the Registrar The Johns Hopkins University, for blank forms of application and for further information as to examinations, award of scholarships, and courses of instruction.

Conscription

By Sara Roberta Getty.

Conscription! One hears the word upon every side, and probably no other word has so stirred the hearts of the people of this nation in years. It is with various and conflicting emotions that we see our young men, the little boys of yesterday, prepare to answer the great call for service to their country, and ours. They are the flower of America's young manhood and it is hard to see them go. The pinched drawn faces of the mothers and wives, the anxious fathers and sisters, the sad-eyed sweethearts, all testify eloquently to the sacrifice that is being made.

Yet, back of the knowledge of the tragic necessity for the sacrifice is a feeling of pride in our boys that they are able and willing to serve as did their forefathers in the cause of Right and Justice. They do not fully understand, perhaps none of us do, yet they give unquestioning obedience. "Theirs not to reason why, theirs but to do and die," and they go, willing to do their part, even though it means great personal inconvenience, impaired health, and perhaps loss of life, and we are proud of them and honor them, these boys of ours, as we send them forth to do their duty, even though it entaiis such great danger.

The path of duty is not always a flower-strewn one, but whatever the danger, God, who is omniscient and omnipresent, as well as tender and loving, will guide, direct and shape our destinies for His best service.

It is Omar Khayyam who says:

"We are no other than the moving row
Of magic shadow shapes that come and go;
Just helpless pieces of the game He plays
Upon the checkerboard of Nights and Days."

Helpless it is true, in ourselves, but while we too may often feel a longing to "grasp this sorry scheme of things entire, and remold it nearer to the heart's desire," yet we know that God permits sorrows and calamities that good may come of it. And how much more helpless we would feel were it not for the knowledge that He knows and cares!

Our boys are just as closely watched, whether at home or in the trenches, on land or on the deep. We know this is true, no matter what may be the outcome, and those whose duties keep them at home can play just as important a part in this great world drama as those who are at the battle front, if they but will, and through our united efforts peace may soon again be within our borders. God, speed it! May there come through this common sorrow, a closer feeling of kinship and responsibility toward our fellow men, and a broader brotherhood! For there could be no war strife if each of us today would follow the example of the Prince of Peace who said: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another."

was going to the home of her sister to live.

Thinking he acted very strangely Mrs. LaRue asked him what he waa trying to hide behind the wagon and under his coat. At this moment he stepped up alongside the wagon and fired with a 12 gauge single barrel shotgun at his wife. The first shot did not take effect and Mr. Alexander grabbed the baby, on Mrs. Alexander's lap and jumped out of the wagon. Mrs. Alexander followed him. In the meantime the horse started down the mountain with Mrs. LaRue only in the wagon and he drew the gun and fired the second shot, the load taking effect in her back. The horse ran only a short distance until it was stopped by Joseph Spiker, father of Mrs. LaRue, who was walking just ahead of the wagon. He heard his daughter screaming and after stopping the horse ran to the side of the wagon. In the meantime Mr. and Mrs. Alexander had reached the wagon, where they also told of the shooting and said they had heard a third shot after LaRue had run up the road some distance. Mrs. LaRue was placed in a buggy that happened to be passing at the time and hurried to the hospital.

In the meantime the story of the shooting had been telephoned to Frostburg and State's Attorney J. Philip Roman notified. Mr. Roman, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Walter Clay, immediately left by automobile for the scene of the shooting. When the party arrived at Frostburg they learned that La Rue had committed suicide, and that his body had been found lying in a field near the top of Big Savage mountain. Accompanied by Officer Hanna, Constable Lewis and William A. Gunter they continued to the scene of the shooting.

About two hundred yards above the watering trough on the east side of Big Savage mountain the body was found lying in the field only a short distance from the National pike. The gun with which he had shot Mrs. LaRue and then taken his own life was lying beside him with the barrel gripped in his hand. His face was not recognizable. The muzzle of the gun had evidently been placed under his chin, the force of the discharge coming out about the center of his face. The body was removed to the morgue of the Frostburg Furniture and Undertaking Company.

When seen at the hospital, Mrs. LaRue did not know of the death of her husband. She pled with the State's Attorney Roman not to persecute him for shooting her, and said she did not think the wound serious. When asked why she did not want her husband prosecuted Mrs. LaRue told the state's attorney she was afraid that he would take her life in the future. She said she had only married him because he had said he loved her and threatened to take her life if she did not marry him. She said they were married only last Easter and their life had been one continual quarrel, and they had separated several times. She said the chief cause of their difference was that he wanted her to live with him at the home of his parents, who reside on a farm "between the Savages." Mrs. LaRue said she had tried to live there several time but conditions were distastful to her. She said she preferred living in a home of her own.

LaRue was under parole by the circuit court for Allegany county, where he was arraigned last March on a charge of assault and battery with intent to murder. The conditions of his parole were that he pay the man whom he had assaulted for the time he was unable to work and his hospital bill. This he agreed to do. He was also among those drawn for the draft army, but claimed exemption on account of being married. On account of his many separations from his wife the examining board of Allegany county had held up decision in his case.

The following notice of the death of the late U. A. Clayton, well known to Mt. Lake Park and Oakland readers of The Republican is taken from the Monday edition of the Fairmont Times:

Mr. Ulysses A. Clayton, for many years one of Fairmont's most prominent residents, and leader of the prohibition party in West Virginia, passed away at a sanitarium at Laurel, Md., Saturday morning. Mr. Clayton had been a patient at this institution about six weeks. He was taken there from Mt. Lake Park, where he had been at the summer home of his brother M. C. Clayton since last spring. For the past two years, Mr. Clayton had been in failing health, and for nearly a year past he had been growing worse steadily. It was his desire to return to Fairmont and plans were made to bring him here within the next week when he passed into the Great Beyond. His brother, M. C. Clayton, was here a few days ago, arranging for the removal of the invalid to a local hospital.

Mr. Clayton was born near Fairmont November 15, 1843. At the time of his death he was in his seventy-fourth year. He was a son of John W. and Harriett J. Boggess Clayton, and was one of a family of nine children.

The deceased received a practical business education in the old subscription schools and begun his career as a shoe merchant in Mannington. He later became associated with the late Senator James H. Furbee, of Mannington, in the lumber business. He continued in this business with success for several years and 1884 came to Fairmont when he purchased a planing mill, which he operated untill 1900. At this time he engaged in the oil business, being a member of the Burnt Oil Company and the Burnt Manufacturing Company, and was an officer and director in both organizations.

Mr. Clayton served as a soldier in the Civil war. He enlisted August 16, 1862, in Company H, Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry, and served until June, 1865, when he was honorably dismissed from the Federal service in Wheeling. He was attached to the army of West Virginia and saw hard marching and fighting under General Sheridan.

The deceased was for years very active in prohibition circles and he headed the state ticket of the prohibition party in several campaigns. He also ran for congress on the same ticket. Mr. Clayton was a prominent Sunday school worker and was for several years president of the West Virginia Sunday School Association. He belonged to the First Presbyterian church of this city, and was a very loyal worker and supporter of his church. He took an active interest in the community and was at the head of any movements that were started for the welfare of mankind.

Mr. Clayton was married twice, both wives having preceded him to the grave. His first wife was Miss Lizzie Burt, daughter of F. H. and Maria Burt, of Mannington. His second wife was before her marriage Miss Amabel Kelley, of near Baltimore. She passed away on April 6, of this year, after a very brief illness.

The deceased belonged to the Masonic lodge of Mannington.

The remains of Mr. Clayton will arrive in Mannington this morning at 11 o'clock and will be taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Clayton. The funeral is announced to take place Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock from the Presbyterian church in Mannington and interment will be made in the cemetery there. The services will be conducted by the Rev. H. G. Stoetzer, of Fairmont, and the Rev. J. V. Koontz, of Mannington.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

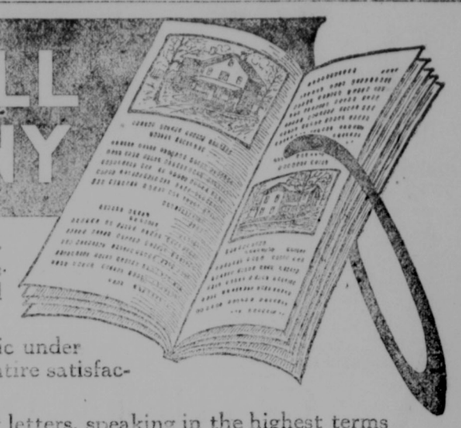
A BOOK FULL OF TESTIMONY



Thousands of Caloric Pipeless Furnaces are owned by as many people—in city, town and country, all over the land.

These owners installed the Caloric under a distinct and definite guarantee of entire satisfaction, or the removal of the furnace.

Hundreds have written voluntary letters, speaking in the highest terms of the Caloric. These letters have been gathered into a quite sizeable book that you may read for yourself if you will call and ask for a copy. This book is for the operator. In fact, the Caloric is guaranteed to make a warmer house on less fuel than any other furnace or heating system. The average amount of fuel saved—as these letters show—is 35%, and the average comfort obtained is 100%.

Do you know of any house-heating system that will beat this record?

The Caloric is a one register furnace. It heats by a natural warm air circulation. Its heat isn't cooled down passing through long crooked pipes, but rises freely and without hindrance from room to room till the whole house is delightfully comfortable. Scientists say that circulated heat is most healthful, and Caloric owners find it true—The Caloric is a perfectly healthful home heater.

You can install the Caloric in any home, new or old, and cheaply. In fact, a cellar isn't absolutely necessary—a pit under the house will do.

We have a Caloric set up and will be delighted to point out its many advantages and money-saving qualities.

Come in and read our surprising guarantee—no other heater can or does make one like it.

MAJ.-GEN. DEVORE VISITS THE PARK

Was the Guest for a Few Days of His Sister, Mrs. Winchell

We are so accustomed to having prominent men visit our community that great men slip in and out without being noticed. Usually they prefer this. We have had the honor, or rather Mt. Lake Park, has had the honor of a visit from General D. B. Devore, who slipped in to visit his sister, Mrs. E. L. Winchell, and as quietly slipped out and back to his post of duty.

The General is a native of Monroe county, Ohio, where his mother Mrs. Mary J. Devore and his brother Dr. C. H. Devore, now reside at Wordsfield.

They two spent a few days with Mrs. Winchel, visiting with their distinguished son and brother. The Genl's father gave his life in the service of his country having died soon after the war as the result of his experience.

In 1881 Gen'l Devore, then only a boy was appointed to West Point Military Academy, through competitive examinations, by Gen'l Daws. Four years later he graduated and was assigned to the Twenty-third U. S. Infantry. During the Geromino outbreak he assisted in capturing the chief and dispersing the tribe. For five years he was assistant professor of mathematics at West Point. He was military aid to Secretary of War Alger, when the Spanish war was declared, but was relieved at his repuest to go to the front.

He served in Porto Rico and in the Philippines and was Civil Governor of Minanao one year, where he established schools and a civilized form of government.

He was afterwards appointed Collector of Customs at Manillo, but other duties prevented his serving in that capacity. He is a graduate of the War College at Washington and was Aid to General Fred Grant in New York for more than a year.

For the past three years he has been in Panama with the Tenth U. S. Infantry, which regiment he brought to Fort Benjamine Harrison last May. He was then Colonel of the regiment. He served in this Fort, as instructor until his promotion on the first of August last, to be Brigador General and assigned to command a brigade at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Ky.

He is a modest though very entertaining gentleman. Some years ago when the noted Missionary Dr. Sheldon Jackson was superintendent of Educational work in Alaska, a bill was passed by Congress appropriating $60,000 to bring Reindeer to Alaska, for the benefit of the people. Gen'l Devore was detailed to accompany Dr. Jackson to Norway, to assist in buying the raindeer and to have charge of the money. This he did with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the government. The success of the enterprise is a monument to his sterling integrity as an honored and efficient servant of the government. He must share the honor with his illustrious helper Dr. Jackson.

In looking over the interesting collection of war relics that deck Mrs. Winchell's home, he incidentally pointed to a formidable looking weapon, that he modestly said had been used in an attack upon him. The presence of the gun and his own presence as well were proof positive that the victory had been his. We wish for the General yet more abundant honors and success in his life's work.

REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE

Organization Effected Tuesday with Charles A. Ashby, Chairman

The recently elected Republican State Committee for Garrett county, composed of Messrs. D. E. Bolden, of Oakland; Charles A. Ashby, of Deer Park; D. O. DeWitt, of Hoyes, and J. B. Emory, of Bittinger, met and organized on Tuesday of this week by the election of the following:

Chairman, Charles A. Ashby; secretary, D. E. Bolden; treasurer, D. O. DeWitt.

THEY WILL LEAVE IN THE MORNING

Sixty-Eight of Garrett County's Men Off For Camp Meade.

Tomorrow morning train No. 2, leaving Oakland eight minutes before nine o'clock, will carry away sixty-eight selected men for Camp Meade, Anne Arundell county, where they will go into training as members of the National Army.

The men have been notified to appear in Oakland and answer to their names before the local board at four o'clock this afternoon. Tonight they will be the guests of the residents and members of the Red Cross Society of Oakland at an entertainment given them at the Empire Theatre when the program printed in this paper last Thursday will be carried out.

The men to leave come from every community in the county. At ten o'clock this morning many arrived in town so that they would be on time. One, a foreigner, came in yesterday afternoon. He is an Austrian and stated to a member of the local board that he had two brothers in the Austrian army and did not want to go and fight his own blood, but the laws of the land must be obeyed and he will be one of the contingent to leave with the men tomorrow.

Following is the arrangement in detail for the movement of the men from Garrett county and other counties of Western Marvland over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad: The men from Garrett county will entrain here at 8.52 on train No. 2. At Cumberland a special train will be made up and there the men from Cumberland and Allegany county will be placed in coaches to be provided. One hundred and sixty men from Hagerstown will be picked up at Weverton in four coaches. Sixty from Washington Junction and Rockville will join the special at those points. The train bearing the quota from Hagerstown will

KITZMILLER BANK ROBBERS KNOWN

Trio That Got $10,000 in Hold-up are in Jail at Woodstock, Va.

Paul and Dave Neff and "Boots" Fry, members of the gang who defied the officers at Walkers Chaple six weeks ago, and who were recently captured at Ottawa, Ohio, were given a preliminary hearing Tuesday in the Justices Court at Woodstock, Va., and were held for the grand jury.

Joseph Jenkins, James Burton, Kitzmiller; C. Harrington, Baltimore; Arthur L. Amos, Baltimore; B. V. Inskeep, cashier of the Kitzmiller bank, and R. Marsh Dean, Elk Garden, W. Va., representative of coal companies and detectives, went to Woodstock Sunday and identified Paul and Dave Neff as members of the gang which held up the bank officials and robbed the bank of Kitzmiller, of about $10,000. One of the men from the mines idenified the Neffs as miners who were at work there until the robbery and then disappeared. The robbers were attired in the garb of the coal miners of that section.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

A Former Resident of Frankville Succumbed at Piedmont.

Mrs. Joseph Dornon, 20 years old, Clarksburg, W. Va., died suddenly as she was leaving Baltimore and Ohio train No. 2 at Piedmont Station Thursday morning. She was accompanied by her husband and 6-month-old-child. They were enroute to Frankville, Garrett county, to visit Mrs. Dornon's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilt. It was thought Mrs. Dornon had fainted, but Dr. Zadock T. Kalbaugh pronounced the woman dead from heart failure. Mr. Dornon said his wife apparently was in the best of health when they left home. The infant was taken to Beryl to be cared for by Mrs. Dornon's sister.

JAILED FOR ANNOYING REV. BILLY SUNDAY

Rev. Chas. Beachy Arrested at Los Angeles for Being Too Zealous.

Rev. Charles Beachy, a native of Grantsville, Md., who has been engaged in evangelistic work in various parts of the country during the past ten years, and represented himself as a lieutenant of Rev. Billy Sunday upon his last visit to his native heath last winter, followed Billy Sunday to Los Angeles, where the latter is at present holding forth, but seems to have trouble of getting into the Rev. Billy's camp, according to the Los Angeles Times of Sept. 8th which contained the following report of Rev. Beachy's activities in the City of the Angels:

Charles Beachy, 44 years old, a visiting minister from Pittsburgh, was taken into custody by Detective Tom O'Brien and J. L. Kirby at his apartment in the Bible Institute last night following complaints made to the police that Mr. Beachy's actions aroused the suspicions of the "Billy Sunday party.

According to the arresting officers, Mr. Beachy several times intruded himself upon the evangelist party, on one occasion insisting on having a seat upon the platform. He carried his religious zeal so far, the detectives say, as to call on the Mayor in his office yesterday afternoon and ask the executive help in becoming a permanent member of the Sunday organization. He then, it is alleged, insisted that "Billy" Sunday supply him with funds to make a trip to Philadelphia and back, so that he could be of help in the great evangelistic work.

Mr. Beachy told the officers he is a retired minister, formerly of Wheeling, W. Va. He expressed his great enthusiasm in the revival work now going on in Los Angeles and acted in a way that caused the officers to bring him to the Receiving Hospital for observation. He probably will be released this morning.

NEW TOWN IN GARRETT COUNTY

Wolf-den Coal Company Will Build New Mining Town.

Bids have been asked by the Wolfden Coal Company for the construction of three hundred houses at the proposed town of "Schellmar" in Garrett county, Maryland, opposite Harrison, West Virginia. W. A. Marshall & Company of New York City have purchased 2,200 acres of valuable coal land in Garrett county and will begin operations in a few weeks. Five hundred more acres are under option by the same company. A giant tipple, one of the largest along the Western Maryland Railway, is already under construction to take care of a daily output of 2,000 tons.

Nearly two miles of standard gauge track is being built from the mines at "Schellmar" to connect with the Western Maryland Railway at Harrison. With the completion of the track and the big tipple the company will begin operations at once. Thomas Griffith, former West Virginia coal operator and now manager of the new Baltimore Hotel, Cumberland, is superintendent of the new company. The mines will be worked panel system.

The new company will be the largest operating in Garrett county, and with the employment of several hundred miners "Schellmar" promises to soon be one of the leading towns in Western Maryland. A large saw mill is now in operation at the proposed site of "Schellmar" where lumber is being cut for the big tipple, houses and other improvements to be made by the company. "Schellmar" will be the center of the virgin coal fields of Garrett county.

ONLY RIGID SAVING CAN PREVENT WORLD FAMINE

By JOHN W. OWENS,
(Staff Correspondent of The Baltimore Sun.)

Washington, Sept. 13.—The purpose of this article is to tell the truth about the food situation of America and its Allies. And the truth is that the situation is utterly critical. We will economize genuinely or men and women and children will be buried because of starvation. This is the truth of the food situation of America and its Allies.

This satement, I know, is unpleasant and alarming. It may be a whole lot of other things, too, but it is not exaggerated. It will be substantiated by the men in this country who know the most about the situation. It comes from sources of unquestioned dependability.

When America entered the war and Herbert Hoover was brought home to administer our food supply, the whole country waxed enthusiastic. Sacrifice and economy — colloquialized into "Hoovering"—was upon everyone's tongue, and seemingly in everyone's heart. We were going to do without this and without that; waste was to be anathema in the kitchen and the dining-room. It reached the proportion of a fad among many of our wealthy people.

One prominent woman, whose establishment employed nine servants for six members of her family, made a public statement of her devotion to "Hooverizing" and explained in some detail her daily conferences with her nine servants looking to a reduction in the consumption of butter and lard and discoursed happily upon the enthusiasm with which the nine servants entered into the new game.

In all of its widespread "Hoovering" —among the loquacious and fad-loving wealthy and among the vast masses of the middle order and the poor—much good undoubtedly was done. But, as time wore on and the available food supply for the average American family did not shrink materially, even though the prices increased, the idea of actual want of actual food, the idea of actual danger of starvation for vast numbers of human beings faded from our consciousness. We came around to the good old American idea of "It will come out all right."

If America could live unto itself everything would come out all right, probably. If we could build an economic wall around our country and say that nothing should go beyond it, we would be able to feed our population comfortably at least. But we cannot do that. We cannot live comfortably in this country while our allies suffer, even if we could steel our hearts to such inhumanity. Self-preservation compels us to the other course. If our allies go down under starvation, we shall have to face alone the power of Germany and her allies. We must live in our world and bear our share of the common burdens and privations of our world.

And the fact is that our world—the world of America and England and France and Italy and Belgium and Russia—faces a definite shortage of food; not a shortage of food in statistical tables, but a shortage of food to put into the mouths of the hundreds of millions of people who compose the populations of those nations; an actual lack of sufficient food to keep together the bodies and souls of the babies and chiloren and women and the others not in the armies; and who, therefore, must go to the second food table, for the first table must be and is reserved for the men in the trenches. They must be fed sufficiently.

No one in all the world realizes this situation so keenly and so fully as Hoover, the man who worked miracles in Belgium, and to whom, through the Food Control and Food Survey acts, we have handed unprecedented power over our food supplies—to whom we have given dictatorial authority over the supplies upon which millions of people depend for life itself.

Mr. Hoover knows the food necessities of America, England, France, Italy, Belgium and Russia as my mother knows the food necessities of her household of three. His knowledge is just as intimate, just as dependable. And he knows the supplies in the common larder of these nations precisely as my mother knows the supplies in her larder. He knows how long those supplies will last for the households of America, England, France, Russia, Italy and Belgium if living is conducted by one or all upon the old extravagant scale; how long if conducted upon a more moderate scale and how long if conducted on a scale of sound and workable economy.

And he knows that the only way the Allied forces opposing Germany and her allies will get through this winter without unspeakable terrible suffering is by rigid economy here in America. The supply of food for the winter has been determined by the production of the past summer. It cannot be added to. It stands an unchangeable bulk against the necessities of our world, and it is insufficient, if our necessities are pitched on the old easy levels. There simply is not enough food in our world today to feed the hundreds of millions of our people and the people of our Allies if the usual wasteful practices are continued, if we here in America live as we have been lately, ever since the declaration of war.

All of the powers given him by the American people through their Congress do not even touch that situation. No people and no Congress may give him power to increase the food supply. That is fixed for this coming winter, was fixed last summer by those who till the ground and search the waters for food. Mr. Hoover's actual powers—the powers which he, personally or through his assistance, may exercise—are authorities over distribution. And when he has achieved 100 per cent. efficiency in distributing the food supply equally and fairly to the hungry mouths of our world there will remain the terrifying fact that there is less food available than our world acquires.

I came to the conclusion the other day that Mr. Hoover was the most sombre man in Washington—which means much more than wi be thought, for he evidently is by nature one of the cheeriest of men. He is all smooth curves; head, face and body. There is not an angle about him, and not a wrinkle. And he has a quick twinkling smile which ran into view and ran away several times. Again he is all efficiency. He runs easily on perfect ball-bearings, with never so much as an infinitesimal waste of motion. Yet there is something about his air of the man condemned—something of the man looking straight into the unthinkable.

It seemed to me—or at least I imagined—that two things were responsible for this sombreness which backgrounded this gracious, strong, magnetic personality. One was his constant view of hungry men women and children across the water, his constant view of an increasing number of men, women and children who either were not sitting down to the table regularly, or, if so, were arising from it with gnawing at the stomach—hundreds of them, thousands of them, millions of them. The other cause I told myself, was his prevision of a verdict of failure upon his work.

His country had given him all the powers possible to do an impossible thing—to keep our hundred million mouths and our Allies' additional hundreds of millions of mouths well filled—and his country had not known that the task assigned to him was impossible, while he knew it all too well. And he had taken the proffered powers and had set himself against the impossible task with the purpose of lessening the inevitable suffering in the maximum degree in which it could be lessened, but with the expectation that his country, counting upon the impossible achievement, would fail to see the real service and, possibly, would "away with him."

No one knows so well as Mr. Hoover the extent to which the economic structure of the world is degenerating. No one knows so well as he that the number of men and women who produce the substance of life is decreasing, while the number of men and women who consume, without producing, is increasing. No one realizes so clearly as he what it means to take millions of men from the fields of production and place them under arms; to take other millions of men and millions of women from the fields of production and place them in industries which fashion implements of war for the men at the front.

No one understands so clearly as he that while the world is reducing with increasing speed the number of producers of food, the necessities of modern war increase the normal food demands of the millions of men at the front, and the million of men and women who build the tools for the men at the front. No one sees so vividly as he that the world today grows one blade of grass where two grew before—that the wastage of the world's resources bears a ratio to the whole which well nigh forecasts economic annihilation. No one appreciates as he does that he cannot cure the disease, that he may merely check its ravages.

He has done magnificent thus far in his job of checking the disease by providing an even flow of food between the producer and the consumer. For example, under the wheat prices and distribution system provided by the Food Administration, the farmer is getting $3 more, considered in units of barrels of flour, while the consumer is paying $3 less. He has cut out $6 that went into middlemen's pockets on each barrel of flour. And he has done that while maintaining a price scale which all the authorities grant will stimulate the farmer to plant the utmost practicable acreage in wheat this fall and next spring.

In cutting out this wastage of $6 per barrel and providing a reasonably normal flow of the staple of food to the hard pressed consumer he has not checked a small group of pocket-picking millionaires. He simply has instituted prices and systems of distribution which eliminate the petty speculation which nearly half a million tradesmen were engaged in—not because they, or most of them, in any event were vicious, but because they were playing the only game they knew and that game was governed by bad rules.

He is working at this time to put other foodstuffs on the table at prices reasonable for such a time as this. That is to say, he is working to force out of warehouses food which should be on its way to the table. He is working to put an end to clogging, where that is the trouble, and to hogging, where that is the trouble. He has power to do that. When he has done so he will have placed before the consumer, ourselves and our allied people, the available food at proper prices.

He hopes and expects to make the available supply of food for our people more accessible, which is equivalent to saying that we shall have it at fair prices. Making the food supply accessible means making prices for it which are fair—in this time. And that means that the prices on many articles will be less than what we paid in the eight months ending August 31, when we were at the mercy of the speculators, great and small, and subject to a system of distinction inadequate for the hour.

But, in private, Mr. Hoover talks not of distribution, not of remedying the cloggings here and hoggings there. He emphasizes and emphasizes that we must get food to our allies—for our own protection in the ultimate if not for humanity's sake—and that to do this we must at this time eat less wheat, beef, pork, dairy products and sugar, which have concentrated nutritive value and take the least shipping space, and that also we must waste less of all foods. If we do that we and our allies shall get through the winter.

Then will come the problem of another year's food supply—another year, in which the number of men and women in the fields of production will be decreased, and the number of men and women bearing arms or serving those bearing arms will be increased. He emphasizes there the necessity not only of concentration of every ounce of available strength upon increased production, but the great, and hitherto almost forgotten, necessity of scientifically balanced production. He would have the farmers of the country heed the advice given by their leaders as to the proportions which wheat should bear to the entire production, which corn should bear, and so on.

The Protector of Finance

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

OPEN FOR RATING

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

WHEN the president of the Atlas National bank sent for Resilius Marvel I was selected as his messenger. When I returned from the office of the United Bankers' Protective association with its active head in my company I was, quite naturally, being the private secretary of the one and the closest friend of the other, motioned to remain. I sank into one of the sumptuous easy chairs which crowded the inner sanctum of the great king of finance, Mr. Robert Drew, feeling sure that I was about to listen to something new and important.

Resilius Marvel looked easy-minded and receptive. I fancied I detected a very slight smile pass over his face as his eye fell upon a heap of bonds outspread and held down by a paperweight on the desk directly before Mr. Drew. The serious, somewhat irritated face of the bank president indicated that he was ill at ease mentally, that he had sent for Marvel much as might a man who had bungled over mending a bruised finger and had been compelled to call in skilled surgical aid. He tried to be off-handed as he selected one of the bonds and passed it over for the inspection of the man whom I had seen do so many clever things, whom I had come to recognize as the grand past-master of foresight and efficiency in the bank mysteries line.

'What do you know about these bonds, Mr. Marvel?" was the question put.

"Everything," was the prompt reply, so speedily given that its enunciation and a bare careless glance at the broad, black letters, 'Jebel River & Great Jangeh Railroad Co.,' were simultaneous.

'That is good," said the president, quite gratefully, clearing his throat and looking hopeful. "This is a special matter, you understand, and confidential. I shall be sorry or glad that the bank holds over $600,000 of those securities after I have heard what you have to say."

"You will be sorry," bluntly replied Marvel. "The whole proposition is a dream, perhaps a fraud. The securities are waste paper, unless—"

"Yes—unless?" pressed Mr. Drew eagerly, almost piteously, with a face grown many shades paler.

"Unless I am able to locate the man who signs them as president of the road—his royal highness of Jangeh."

I was struck with the extraordinary words. Marvel had placed the bond on the desk. It was within my reach, and as unobtrusively as I could I drew it towards me. Several of the bonds of this issue had passed under my eye casually in the regular course of business of the bank during the past two months, but I had never scanned them particularly. Now I read the signatures: "Zwun Zhi, King of Jangeh, President; Napoleon Lucroix, Imperial Treasurer, Secretary."

"Half of these bonds," spoke Mr. Drew, placing an unsteady hand on the heap, "are collateraled. Over $200,000, however, represent a direct purchase of the bank."

"At what price?" inquired Marvel.

"From 85 to 92."

"And they dropped 15 points this morning," recounted my well-posted friend. "They will go down to 40 today before the Stock Exchange closes."

I caught a convulsive click in Mr. Drew's throat. His fingers were beating a rapid tattoo on the crisp, gaudy securities. The sound appealed to me like the ominous swish of dry leaves in harvest time, preceding a storm.

"You see," he managed to speak, "there seemed no doubt of the security. While Jangeh is a barbaric kingdom, its resources are tremendous; ivory, gold, diamonds and immense droves of cattle. All the country lacks is some thoroughfare to the coast. The idea was to build a line out from Uganda on the Victoria Nyanza, a large inland lake, beyond Angora to the Jebel river. The natives could then float their cattle and other products down the stream, transfer to the Coast road, and reach Zanzibar through German East Africa. It looked as favorable as the Cecil Rhodes development schemes or the recent Soudan exploitations."

"Yes, so the prospectus said," nodded Marvel dryly.

"The deed of trust," went on Mr. Drew in almost feverish haste and with a shade of pleading unction in his tone, "covers nearly 3,00 ,000 acres of land, two palaces, fifteen native cities, half a dozen gold mines— together valued at some fifty r illions of dollars. The bond issue is a bare million. Another point: Ralston & Co., bankers, have the construction contract, and guarantee th payment of interest and principal on these bonds."

"Again the prospectus—you have a good memory, Mr. Drew," said Marvel quietly.

"Why, see here," resumed the bank president, more like a man defending a client than asking for information. "look at this."

Very animatedly he drew over to him the big rating book. His nervous fingers fumbled he leaves and then ran over the initial inde . "Here it is. Ralston & Co., GAA, rillion and over, the highest capital and credit rating possible. I cannot understand the flurry in those bonds. Ralston & Co. stand behind the proposition on a strong guarantee."

He looked at Marvel in some defiance. The latter took the challenge mildly. His hand went into an inner pocket and drew forth a slip of tissue paper. He passed this to the bank president.

"I sent the day before yesterday," he said, "to the commercial agency for a report on Ralston & Co. You observe what the agency reported: 'Open for rating.'"

It was not the first time Mr. Drew had heard that technical agency phrase. In a vague way it was generally understood to indicate an investigation pending, a lacking verification of antecedents, or anticipation of a promised statement.

"As you know," observed Mr. Drew, closely scanning the bit of flimsy, "they are a comparatively new firm. Very often a rating is withheld or suspended awaiting a reorganization, or for some other transitory condition."

"Today," pursued Marvel steadily, "I have learned a somewhat peculiar fact. The reporter who held that rating open the next day went to the office of Ralston & Co. to receive a promised statement. He withdrew the rating owing to some suspicions he did not impart to his chief. He has never been seen since. His name is Clinton Durham, and he has mysteriously, utterly, disappeared."

"And you infer from this—?" questioned Mr. Drew.

"Blackmail, briefly, or foul play, for last evening Ralston & Co., which means Bernard Ralston, drew out every dollar they had in the local banks and have evidently closed shop."

The bank president sprang to his feet.

"I had not heard of that," he said huskily.

"You will, in the afternoon papers," explained Marvel. "The laggard interest money, suspicion, a sense of insecurity, have caused the first raid on the Jebel River bonds. You can fancy what the Stock Exchange will do when the disappearance of Ralston is public property."

The bank president was pacing the floor in sheer agitation. Always hitherto he had posed to me as a great man handling big events and never showing the white feather. Just now he disdained all self-restraint or egotism.

"Do something!" he said in a hoarse broken tone.

"I intend to," replied Marvel. "You have done all the talking so far—let me do some. I will tell you what very few know.

"The bonds were invalid in the first place; a signature is lacking. I think I can obtain it. If I do, the bondholders will not lose. As you quoted from the prospectus, the physical security behind the deed of trust is ample—provided the title is right. It is quite the reverse, but I hope to rectify it."

Marvel was done. Too many times had Mr. Drew consulted him not to know that. He drank a glass of water in feverish haste. Then he took up his check book.

"You understand—of course—" he began significantly.

"When the case is through," interrupted Marvel. "I want our friend here for a week," and he placed his hand on my arm. "I need some help."

I smiled at Marvel in deprecation. I had been so fortunate as to be his companion in several cases he had worked up. To speak of help—and from me! I laughed outright. The only suggestions I had even ventured to make to him had been based on stupid deductions.

"I don't think you understand," he said, locking his arm in mine as we left the bank. "Metaphysically I have found you a silent but willing buffer in the midst of developing ideas. I sometimes think you are valuable in catching them, and by some telepathic sense extracting their values. They percolate through your mentality and come back to me clarified. That is the real transference of thought, you know."

There was always something interesting going on at Resilius Marvel's office. On the present occasion I looked around it to catch any indication there might be of a suggestion of the unusual. Its proprietor motioned me to chair in the outer apartment. In less than a minute Loti, his handy man, servitor and assistant, came from a side room. He greeted me with his usual reserved yet graceful obeisance. Lying on a table was a cane and a woman's handbag. I watched him as he halted where they lay, then touched them. I noticed those delicate nostrils of his quiver, contract and relax. A strange man this Loti, gifted in his peculiar sense of smell, still more remarkable in the theories he adduced from an exercise of it. I had known him to scent the germs of pestilence in a closed packet. I had heard of his analyzing ownership, by the same highly developed trait, of a roll of disputed bank bills. I augured that the cane and the handbag belonged to present visitors in the private office. The cane was such as a born dandy might carry. The handbag was crude in material and clumsy in shape. It was made of alligator hide and was ornamented with shiny, mottled scales of some gaudy tropical fish.

At one side of Marvel's desk and within its shadow was a woman. I could only divine this from her apparel. Nothing of her features showed, for she was deeply veiled. I made out that she must be squat to the point of obesity. Her hands were splay, but stumpy. I wondered what the handbag and cannibals could have to do with her.

"This is my friend," spoke Marvel shortly, and did not even look up from some writing he was engaged in.

The man straightened up with an elaborate gesture of courtesy. He was a natural poseur, his manner showed.

"It is my service profound to the friend of a friend," and he kissed the tips of his fingers towards me.

"Be brief," came curtly from Marvel's lips.

The Frenchman made a slight grimace of hurt dignity and reproach. Then he reached within the fashionably modeled coat he wore and brought out a tattered and indented card case. Its dislocated hinge came loose as he opened it. He extracted daintily and with infinite care what it contained.

This was the dirtiest card I had ever seen. He handled it as carefully as if it was some treasured heirloom. He tendered it gingerly, tiptoeing to reach me.

"If monsieur will read and return," he said.

The card was not illuminating. With infinite pride the Frenchman received it back from me, and then with sorrowful intonation remarked:

"Once honored, I, Lefort—in the grand days of the cantatrice, the models of Worth, of duchesses, while now—alas!"

He embraced the squat figure in shadow, mute and ominous as some veiled sphynx, within a sweeping inclination of his hand. Then a diminishing crescendo of his nimble, airy fingers seemed to indicate leagues of space, something too immense to describe, and far away.

"The House," he finally resumed—"Vinc, Ropstorff & Blecha. The one—the only. And Vienna—the center of metropoli, of grandeur, of sublimity." He sighed deeply. His eyes grew moist. "And I, Lefort, representatif. That was nearly two years ago. Since then"—again the hand wave, despairing and dismal, embracing the universe—and always the squat, veiled figure included.

"Of the House, what is there to tell? Institute W. Schimmelfing, Berlin, the credit dictator of the world, has already told. Dolls—that speak, that walk, that waltz—and live! And the apotheosis of art attained when the great Sophia Voltmar model was reached!"

I understood that the House with three names were doll makers extraordinary; that he, Lefort, was their representative.

"See you, even royalty came to view, in the brilliantly illuminated show window, Sophia Voltmar. The miniature latest creation of Worth in which the doll was garbed cost 3,000 thalers. About its neck was the Damon string of pearls. It had taken coast fisherman two years to gather these, mated from the center from a hazel nut size to that of a pea, and listed at 12,000 pounds sterling."

From all this I began to understand that the racy Sophia, founder of the celebrated "Cobra" dance known over two continents, had been duplicated in doll fashion and exhibited to the Vienna world as a most artistic specimen of the exclusive handicraft of the House.

"I was deputized, honored with the commission, to convey this latest production of the House to Paris," proceeded the volatile Lefort. "When it was ready for packing the Damon string of pearls was removed. There was substituted a cheap imitation necklace. It was unfortunate that in my pride, my desire to show this marvel of the House to some friends at Marseilles, I did not proceed direct to Paris, where the doll was to be placed in a case before the Grand Opera House, where Sophia Voltmar was the attraction. I found my friends at the seaboard city absent at a wedding. Always my precious case with me, I strolled about the harbor. It was one of those royal evenings, the air pure wine, the sky a vaulted sapphire, the lovely Mediterranean a sheet of liquid gold. I took a row boat, my case ever at my side. Just as dusk came up a yawl holding three men. They ran into me. I later guessed that these bandits must have followed me from Vienna and were after the Damon pearls, which they believed had remained on the doll. A blow, insensibility, and it was a long, dull dream of many weeks for me.

"When I came to myself again the world was nearly a month older. I had been picked up, I and my case, by a schooner in the African trade. My pockets had been ransacked. There was nothing to indicate who I was when the schooner found me. The card I showed you I later discovered in the lining of my coat. A storm had driven the schooner out of her course. They simply kept me aboard because they made few landings. There was a passenger who probably recognized that I was a gentleman of culture, possibly of means. This was one Napoleon Ducroix."

I gave the speaker an intense stare. The pen with which Marvel was writing made a splatter just here. It was purposeful, to emphasize what I naturally had discovered, that Napoleon Ducroix was the name attached to the Jebel River & Great Jangeh bonds.

"Ducroix learned my story. He affected great interest in my forlorn condition. He advised that I remain on board the schooner until Cape Town was reached. Thence I could cable to the house, explaining all.

"My first care was the doll. Except where a dash of rain and salt water had slightly discolored the dress, its beauty, its grandeur, were apparent as ever. The string of false pearls was gone—wrenched from place by the robbers, who supposed they had secured the famous Damon gems.

"ONCE HONORED, I, LEFORT - IN THE GRAND DAYS OF THE CANTATRICE, THE MODELS OF WORTH, OF DUCHESSES, WHILE NOW - ALAS!"

"My blow had been a bad one, and I was a convalescent for some time. The schooner lined the West coast We entered the Gulf of Guinea just as the typhoon season came on. The grain coast of Liberia, the ivory coast of Ashantee, the gold coast of Dahomey, the slave coast of the bight of Biafra—all these we passed in safety, and then, one tempestuous night, the schooner went to pieces, blown upon a rock by a gale that drove every man on deck overboard.

"Peste! Canaille! sortie de cie! It was the traitor Ducroix who was my partner in a wild swim for the shore. An empty water barrel for our buoy, we landed on a barren coast. By some strange fate we drifted inland. As I learned later, we must have crossed all of the French Congo. We arrived at the Jebel river, we penetrated Jangeh. Our first sight of humanity was of the tribesmen of Zwun Zhi, the king."

Lafort made a wry face. Again his glance, bitter and resentful, wandered towards the squat, veiled figure. Then he mouthed rather than articulated the gruesome word: "Cannibals!" I reflected: Jangeh—was it there the veiled woman came from?

"Through wreck, hardship, perils on land, I never lost sight of my case, of the peerless Sophia. She was a reminder of the glorious past. We were taken before the king. In the gleaming, hungry eyes of his servitors I noted the greasy unction of festive appetite; in his own, only indifference, the lazy curiosity of a man lulled to content by half a hundred wives and superabundance of food. He was curious enough to inspect my case, and then—"

"To be brief," he continued, "the king roused up like a man drawn by a magnet to some fascination irresistible. He was smitten with the counterfeit presentment of the peerless Sophia. He appropriated the doll and I was left to mourn. I know not how the infamous Ducroix wormed his way into the confidence of the king. I know not how by signs he made his majesty know that the original of the doll was alive and could be found, and that he could lead him to her. I only know that one month later, with the royal exchequer looted, the infatuated monarch and his confidant, Ducroix, secretly stole away from the palace.

"The king had deserted his wives; they soon realized this. Only one queen, his first wife, mourned. It took me two months to learn sufficient of the Jangeh gibberish to make her understand all the merits of the situation. It took Queen Ibi Zwoa only two minutes to engage me to accompany her in a world girdling chase of his recreant highness.

"Therefore am I here. What I have learned has been through our host," and he pointed at Marvel, "to whom we were directed by the French consul. Admirable direction! Estimable man! We have told him all, but—we have not found the king."

Marvel arose. I noticed a switch of the veil, and the woman it covered also arose. It was a signal that the conference was ended. She could not have been more than four feet in height. With some querulous gibberish, in a voice that might have belonged to a child, she lifted her veil.

It was only for a moment that I had a sight of the face of Queen Ibi Zwoa, but I shall never forget it.

I was sent on a variety of missions during the ensuing several days, the real purport of which I did not fully understand at the time. I realized that I was taking helter-skelter stitches only in a network of which the master hand held the main warp and woof.

I also knew that Marvel had notified the civilized world to find and detain Bernard Ralston. Beyond that he had local emissaries and outside correspondents on the trail of King Zwun Zhi.

"The king," he announced to me one evening, "is in hiding, or dead. It seems that he and that clever agent of his, Ducroix, followed Sophia Voltmar clear across the continent. I hear of gifts to that peerless beauty beyond the purse of a king. Lured on, but never so much as touching the hem of her garment, this fatuous admirer has been encouraged, duped and beggared. The railroad scheme was evidently an afterthought of Ducroix when their money gave out. I find they sold the entire issue to Ralston for a mere song. The proceeds went in the main to the conspirators who acted for Voltmar. If King Zwun Zhi is in hiding, I have reason to believe that he is in this city. I shall soon know."

It came sooner than I expected. It was a drizzling, gloomy evening, that on which I accompanied Marvel to the Cosmos cafe. It was a second-rate place, mostly visited by men. As we entered the door I noted Loti in the background. He made a sign to Marvel, and it seemed to me to indicate a man lounging carelessly against an old piano.

Just beyond it four men were playing cards at a table, and the man I have mentioned was in a position to look over the hand of the player whose back was to him. As if in a casual way, the man at the piano struck three of the ivory keys in succession with his finger. A moment later he struck four notes, and then quickly a single note three times. Marvel was watching him narrowly. Of a sudden he turned half way around. He simply fixed his eye on Loti. The latter disappeared. In about five minutes he re-entered the place, two men with him. These men approached the man at the piano. What they said to him I do not know, but he fidgeted, changed color and with evident reluctance accompanied them from the place.

"Come with me," directed Marvel, following on their heels. "That man, I believe, is Napoleon Ducroix. We shall soon find out. He must have had a royal time helping Zwun Zhi squander his fortune. He has got down to the level of a professional card sharper now, it seems. Did you notice his playfulness with the piano? Those careless key taps read, first 'A-C-E,' next, 'F-A-C-E,' informing his friend in the game that his adversary held the ace and four face cards in his hand."

It was to the captain's room at the nearest police station that they took the man from the piano. When we arrived there Marvel looked him over critically.

"Take off his shoe, Loti," he said simply. This was done, with some resistance on the part of the prisoner. To the ankle the bared member showed a peculiar reddish brown.

"You are Napoleon Ducroix," spoke Marvel, "and there is no need of sending for Emil Lafort to prove it. He tells me your distinguishing marks are a pair of feet marked still from your old service in a Parisian dye factory. Shall we go any further on that score, my friend?"

"Yes, I am Ducroix," acknowledged the man, sourly. "What of it?"

"Detention, complications, perhaps a prison sentence, unless you assist in helping me clear up a situation."

"About what?"

"King Zwun Zhi. You know where he is? Then tell and you are free to pick up some new victim."

Ducroix was silent for a minute or two. He eyed Marvel in a studious way. Those unlovely eyes of his showed boldness and defiance on the surface, but there was a flicker of fear in their depths.

"The game is played out, I guess," he said finally.

"Where is the king?"

"In pawn."

This man spoke truly. He had, indeed, played the game to the limit. This bold knave had exhausted the last shred of revenue available from the monarch of Jangeh in their extraordinary jump around the world. If he had not been a spendthrift he would have been a millionaire.

At last my eyes rested on the self-exiled, butterfly-chasing, stranded king. As I first saw him he was crouching over a blazing oil stove in a squalid room behind the shop of a pawnbroker. If his wife's face had resembled dusky mahogany, his own was more of the hue of ebony. He was thin and wasted, a furtive, frightened look in his shrinking eyes. The desperation of the prodigal down to his last husk was expressed in every lineament of his shrunken face.

In some way Ducroix had induced the pawnbroker to advance a small sum on his majesty. The latter had insisted on retaining personal possession of the collateral. Warm as was the weather, the thin, tropical blood of the king demanded constant heat, and in the bill which Marvel paid there was an item of "Kerosene, $4." In a corner of the room, a marred wreck, was what was left of the famous doll.

It was to the office of the United Bankers' Protective association that the king was at once conveyed. Ducroix accompanied us, and Lafort was immediately sent for. The two fiery Frenchmen came very near to blows, but Marvel sternly held them down to the importance of the occasion and to strict business.

I was sent to the home of the president of the bank, and brought him back with me. The institution was visited, certain documents pertaining to the Jebel River & Great Jangeh Railroad company secured, and a new deed of trust was made out.

"If you can influence Queen Ibi Zwoa to sign that," observed Marvel to Lafort, "she can come and see her husband here. If not, she will see him behind steel bars."

It was all arranged within a few hours—the possession of an absolutely valid deed covering the Jangeh property. And that meant a new promotion, and the saving to the bank of its ill-advised original investment.

The president could well afford to be liberal, and Ducroix went away with enough in his pocket to stake him till he found a decent job, if that was his inclination, which it probably was not. Lafort was ecstatic over the possession of a thousand, and it was arranged to get King Zwun Zhi and his wife back to their home possessions in a respectable way.

I was with Resilius Marvel when he wound up the last strand of this remarkable case. It was at the deserted offices of Ralston & Co. We found, fallen behind one of the dust-laden desks, a man's cap, and written in red ink on the inside lining was the name: "Clinton Durham."

The big safe of the defunct promoter held nothing but useless office records, the vault in which it stood only equally valueless litter. The climax, however, arrived when a second vault was opened.

Upon its floor lay a prone figure. It was the owner of the misplaced cap, dead—dead for many days.

We could only conjecture from a crumpled document in his cold hand what it all meant. The unfortunate mercantile reporter had become suspicious, had suspended the rating of Ralston & Co., and had revisited their office for proofs to sustain his judgment of the condition of the concern.

The paper in his hand was a private balance sheet, showing the house insolvent. He must have had an opportunity to slip into the vault to secure it. He had been discovered, probably by Ralston, with the indisputable evidence of the insolvency of the concern in his possession. The door of the vault had been crashed shut, and then, within twenty-four hours, gathering up all he could lay his hands to, Bernard Ralston had vanished.

A week later Resilius Marvel showed me a telegram from Loti, dated at Los Angeles. He was on the trail of Ralston, who was aiming to get out of the country.

There was a longer wire two days later—again from Loti, close on the track of the absconder. The latter, hemmed in, had tried to escape over a narrow mountain road. A wrong turn sent the automobile and its driver three hundred feet below to the bottom of a rock-strewn canyon. The machine had turned turtle, shutting out from sight the frightful end of the man who had been Open for Rating.

Brotherhood.

Your task is to form the universal family, to build the City of God, and by a continuous labor gradually to translate his work in humanity into fact.

When you love one another as brothers, and treat each other reciprocally as such; when each one, seeking his own good in the good of all, shall identify his own life with the life of all, his own interests with the interests of all, and shall be always ready to sacrifice himself for all the members of the common family—then most of the ills which weigh upon the human race will vanish, as thick mists gathered upon the horizon vanish at the rising of the sun.—From "The Book of the People," by Robert de Lamennais, French philosopher and religious reformer, 1782-1854.

Was Only Shopping.

"My heavens, Jack," said the lady who had been waiting in the Claridge lobby. "What was the matter? Where have you been?"

"Nothing th' matter, m'dear," was the reply. "Not a thing in th' world. Jus' been doing a li'l shopping aroun' some saloons."—New York Letter in the Cincinnati Times-Star.

A JOYOUS FAREWELL.

All hail to our soldier boys who leave tomorrow to join their comrades in arms!

Every loyal American is envious of the privilege given the sons of Garrett county in having an opportunity to vitalize anew for the entire world the spirit of Washington, Lincoln and McKinley—the spirit of democracy and freedom!

Mothers and brothers, wives and sweethearts bear striking testimony to the travails of giving to the nation the best of her sons—the boys who leave tomorrow, the boys who have gone before, and the boys yet ready to rush forward to their country's call.

May the music of their going never cease to cheer those left behind!

Their going enkindles within those who miss them most a more fiery patriotism and ardent desire to be up and striking for their God, their native land and her thrilling traditions.

Those who haev made the most costly offerings stand ready to make still greater sacrifices!

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty!

Good bye! Good luck! God bless you!

And pity for those left behind who do not respond to the cry of democracy and freedom for relief from the crushing heel of autocratic kaiserism!

WHAT ABOUT SMALL MINES?

Dr. Garfield, the nation's fuel administrator, proposes to see that there is plenty of coal for everyone. He has a list of all the cool mines of the country and a statement of their producing capacity. He intends to notify each of them to deliver a certain percentage of their output to the government at the price the President has named. From the accumulation of government coal, Dr. Garfield will supply the individual consumer. But the owners of the smaller coal mines say that they cannot produce coal at the price which President Wilson has offered. If this is true and if they deny Dr. Garfield's right to compel them to deliver coal at a loss—what then? Will Dr. Garfield take over the mines and operate them in the name of the government, with a Congressional appropriation to make up the deficit? Or will the owners be forced to run their mines at a loss in behelf of the Government? This price-fixing business leads to many complications.

THE MYSTERY OF BREAD PRICES.

Bread is cheaper in London than it is here. Mr. Irwin, grain controller of this port, expects to see a fourteen ounce loaf sell for a nickle before long. But right now a pound loaf sells in London for 4½ cents. "I am convinced that this cheap bread sold in London is not—cannot be—of a quality that would be acceptable to our people here. It is usually very dark in color and altogether coarse and unattractive," says Mr. Irwin.

But the question need not depend upon any one's personal beliefs or convictions. The English bread can be analyzed and its exact nutritive value determined. There need be no mystery about it. We do not want to fare better or worse than our allies. English people and Americans must combine against the profiteers of both nations. We must have every fact we can get from the English to show up our own profiteers. Americans who mean to win this war at any cost will prefer to eat dark and unattractive bread to being gouged.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

To Fathers and Mothers.

The call for our boys has come, and may we have the strength and faith of Abraham who when called to take his son Isaac and go into the mountains andt here offer him as a burnt offering. With a heavy and aching heart, he obeyed, trusting in that God who had never failed him. Up and up he climbed. The way was rugged and steep but never faltering because his duty was to obey. The top at last was reached, and all things were made ready and I imagine as we bid our sons obey the call and go, so Abraham felt as Isaac said, "Father, where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" What but faith in a great and loving Father could answer in a time like that. God in his wisdom had prepared an offering and the boy was saved. Our hearts are heavy with the weight of sorrow as we bid our boys obey and march them off to this awful, hellish war. But let us have that faith of Abraham that stood the test of ages and brought him to the highest pinnacle of faith. We will find him who gave his own beloved Son that we through him might live, in some mysterious way his wonders to perform, has prepared a sword of peace and love to conquer the world and our boys will be returned to us unharmed.

A MOTHER.

Oakland, Sept. 27, 1917.

Married.

STAPLETON—GUYTON—Mildred Pearl Guyton and Howard Brazell Stapleton both of Uniontown, Pa., were married at high noon on Tuesday at the Lutheran parsonage by Rev. S. E. Wicker. The impressive ring ceremony was used. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bryson also of Uniontown.

SINCELL—VANCLEVE—Miss Anna Gladys VanCleve, daughter of Mr. Jas. R. VanCleve, of Flint, Michigan, and Mr. Charles Milton Sincell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Sincell, Oakland, were married Saturday evening, September 22nd, at 6 o'clock at the home of the groom's parents, in the presence of the immediate families. The ceremony was performed by the pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, the Rev. Wm. M. Shultz. Mr. and Mrs. Sincell left after the ceremony on a trip to Philadelphia and other eastern cities and on their return will reside at the home of the groom's parents.

SINSEL—LAKE—A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Capt. and Mrs. James Brock last Thursday evening, at which time Mrs. Brock's daughter, Miss Gertrude Warder Lake, became the bride of Mr. George Ono Sinsel, of Flemington, W. Va., the ceremony being performed by Rev. G. H. Snyder, of the Methodist Protestant church of Grafton, in the presence of immediate relatives and a few close friends of the contracting parties. Mr. and Mrs. M. Channing Owens, brother-in-law and sister of the bride, were the attendants.

Following the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served, after which the happy couple departed on Train No. 12 for a wedding trip to Detroit, Mich., Niagara Falls and other points of interest, followed by the best wishes of their many friends. After their return they will be at home to their friends in Flemington, W. Va.

The Grafton Sentinel, in its report of the wedding last Friday had the following to say of the principals:

"The bride is one of Grafton's fairest daughters, possessing, in addition to charm of person and manner, the higher atributes to pure noble womanhood. She has the love and respect of hundreds of admiring friends whose good wishes will follow her through life.

The grodm is the son of Mrs. W. A. Sinsel, of Flemington, this county. He is an excellent young man, possessing many superior traits of character, and is conceded to be eminently worthy of the young lady he has won for his bride. For a number of years he has been engaged in the mercantile business in his home town and is also president of the Bank of Flemington. No man possesses a higher sense of honor than Ona Sinsel. He has thus won to himself hundreds of friends who will join the Sentinel in extending congratulations to him and his bride together with the wish that their wedded life begun so auspiciously may be dimmed by but few clouds and that they may have a happy and prosperous future."

TWO AS AVIATORS 1 INFANTRYMAN

Is Garrett County's Quota of Enlisted Men This Week.

Garrett county is still doing her bit toward furnishing fighting men for the Regular Army.

On Monday Randall Ravenscroft, son of former Senator and Mrs. Ravenscroft, of Accident, and John W. Hart, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Hart, Sr., of Oakland, went to Cumberland where they passed successfully the initial examination for entrance into the flying corps of the army. From Cumberland the two young men went to Baltimore where they were again examined and passed. They returned to Oakland this morning and are holding themselves in readiness to report for duty when called upon.

James Stemple, of Oakland, enlisted in the infantry service at the Cumberland recruiting office yesterday. He came to Oakland last night to visit his mother and other relatives and will leave this evening for Baltimore from which city he will probably be assigned to the Colombus barracks.

Apron Sale.

The cemetery committee of the Oakland Civic Club will have a booth at the Fair, for the sale of aprons.

The ladies will be pleased to have aprons or money donated for this good cause.

The fence and gates are paid for, and the money is now needed for cutting grass and weeds and cleaning up generally.

Miss Amelia Lauer has returned to school after an attack of neuralgia.

Miss Bernadette Carney, of the Freshman class, went to Cumberland Saturday.

Mrs. George Legge, who has been teaching Mathametics and English will discontinue her work on Friday of this week. Her assistance is greatly appreciated by the faculty and student body, and it is with regret that we learn of her determination to leave us. Rev. Samuel E. Wicker, of the Lutheran church, has been elected to the faculty and will teach mathametics and English.

The following is an extract from the letter of a soldier boy and a member of the O. H. S. Alumni:

To my Friend and Teacher:

I often think of you and appreciate what you and the high school did for me. I used to feel pretty sore when you disciplined me but I know now it was for my own good.

Life is pretty dull here in the barracks. We can't even "sass" our teachers I am studying civil engineering with the mapping and surveying division of my company and can already draw a creditable military map.

About half the company is composed of veterans of the Haitian and Santo Domingo Wars, and some few of the Spanish war. It was quite an honor for Joe Rathbun to be among the first to land in France, and the school ought to feel proud of him.

I am on the relay team with Eddie Mahon, the Harvard star, and two other University men.

If I can be of any service to you or the school I shall be glad to do anything I can.

ESTABLISHED 1884

Mr. Farmer, Listen!

During the Fair we will sell you Farm Machinery (such as we have a good stock of) for less than the market price today.

We have the assurance that machinery of all kinds will be very much higher in price for 1918 than present prices, owing to the high price of steel and labor.

Machinery as yet has not advanced in proportion to the price of steel that enters into the making of same.

We have a good stock of Mowers, Rakes, Tedders, Grain Drills, Manure Spreaders, (wide spread) a few Olive Plows and a nice stock of Wagons on hand.

We will give next year's terms on Harvesting Machinery. We think we are safe in saying that Binders will be $200, Mowers $75 or $80, Rakes $40, and all other machinery in proportion for 1918.

Whether you buy of us or not our advice is to get your machinery for next year now.

Remember the Place and that

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

County Association Held Two Days Session At Accident.

The annual convention of the Garrett county Sunday School Association was held in the Lutheran church on last Thursday and Friday and was presided over by president, Mr. E. R. Jones, of Oakland.

The program as arranged was carried out in detail with one or two exceptions where substitutions were made in the speakers.

The people of Accident showed that they certainly knew how to handle conventions. The entertainment afforded the delegates by the good people of that town will long be remembered.

May Locate Fish Hatchery Here.

Mr. J. P. Snyder, Fish Culturist of the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, as the representative of the State Conservation of Maryland, visited Oakland on last Thursday for the purpose of testing volume and temperature of water of streams of this county with a view of locating a brook trout and bass hatchery for this state.

He was accompanied on his visit to the several streams by that expert angler Jas. H. Painter, Jas. D. Hamill and Deputy Sheriff Jesse Ashby and was very favorably impressed with several locations. Mr. Snyder expressed his belief that Garrett county was the logical location for the hatchery and will make his report to the Conservation Commission after which the selection of a site will be taken up by the commission.

Other locations throughout the state have been inspected by Mr. Snyder and other counties in the western section of the state are making strenuous efforts to secure the hatchery but this county with its pure water and ideal climate has many advantages to offer that are not to be found elsewhere in the state.

BUSINESS HABITS AT HOME

SOME men throw business habits aside when they get home. The fact is that the same care and foresight should be used in the home as in the office, store or factory. A checking account should be opened for the household accounts and all money deposited and all expenses paid by check. This plan is simple and greatly assists the home keeper to take care of the income and expenses.

THE BIG FAIR IN OAKLAND

Outlook is Bright for Very Successful Show and Record Attendance.

The management of the Great Oakland Fair informs us that arrangements are about completed for the big show, which opens next Tuesday, Oct. 2, and continues until Friday, Oct. 5th. The annual catalog and premium list has been mailed to a large number of prospective exhibitors, and the association officers have every assurance that the exhibits this year will out-class anything ever attempted at the fair. This, no doubt, is due to the very liberal premiums offered by the association, in addition to which has been added a great many attractive offers of special premiums by several banks and other business houses throughout the county and the Horticultural Society of Maryland, full particulars of which will be found in the advertisement of the Fair Association in another part of this paper today.

The amusements this year are to be especially attractive, as well as numerous, including many free daily exhibitions, and those who enjoy this feature can feel assured that they will not be disappointed. The music will be well taken care of by the famous McIlwee Concert Band, of Keyser, W. Va., which will play two concerts daily, as well as during all parades.

The hotel and restaurant people of Oakland are making arrangements to entertain the greatest crowd in the history of the town, as every indication points to a record attendance on all four days of the Fair.

The Fair management desire to inform those who intend making exhibits to make their applications not later than Monday, October 1st, in order to avoid the usual rush on opening day, and to enable these in charge to properly list and place such exhibits.

A special feature of the Fair will be the daily parades, for which a number of prizes are offered and information regarding which may be found in the Fair advertisement, as well as in the catalog.

Every citizen of Garrett county should put a "shoulder to the wheel" and help boost Garrett County's Big Annual Show by making an exhibition of some kind. We can show the rest of the State something in nearly every line of agriculture, as well as in live stock raising, and our farmers, for whom primarily the Fair was organized, should show the proper interest in the exhibition department. If you cannot exhibit anything, make it a point to attend one or more days anyhow and see what someone else has to show.

I have a full line of Fall and Winter Hats. Will sell for cash or produce. Please call and see for yourself.

$2.00 for second best 5 selections of Honey.

$3.00 for best quart of extract Honey,

$2.00 for second best quart of extract Honey.

These additional prizes should be a stimulation to farmers and bring forth more exhibits. In the last analysis the Oakland fair of Garrett county will be what the farmers make it. The Fair Association has done all in its power to make the Fair a success.

The buildings have been repaired and grounds put in order and attractions have been secured and the money for premiums is on hand. Consequently, if the Fair is not a success it will be due to those who should have exhibits. Let us get together and make this the biggest and grandest Fair that has ever been held in Garrett county.

As everyone knows our county is primarily an agricultural county and being such should be able to support as fine a county fair as any county in any State of the United States.

Let every farmer exhibit something. There is no one in the county who cannot find something to exhibit. There will be no charge made for exhibition on any of the products for which these special premiums are being awarded.

Very truly yours,
A. G. MIDDLETON,
County Agent.

P. S. The products for these special premiums must all be produced in Garrett county.

Harvest the Crops — Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and helo to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

HOW INSANITY HAS GAINED

Increase in United States Revealed by Census Taken by National Committee for Mental Hygiene.

Insanity in the United States is decidedly on the increase. This fact is revealed by reason of a census taken of the insane, feebleminded, epileptics, inebriates and drug addicts by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene. Analysis of this census is found in the Mental Hygiene. It was compiled by Horatio M. Pollack, statistician of the New York State Hospital commission, and Edith M. Furbush, statistician of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene.

The federal census bureau estimates that the increase of population from April 15, 1910, to January 1, 1917, was 11.80 per cent. The same government agency found in 1910 that the number of insane in institutions was 187,791. The census taken in the present year revealed 234,055 insane persons in institutions. Thus the increase in the insane in institutions during the corresponding period was 24.64 per cent, a growth more than double that of the general population.

Moreover, the rate of increase of the insane in institutions was relatively greater than that of the general population in every state except Arizona, Kansas, Mississippi, Nevada and South Carolina. Illinois is one of the states in which the disparity between growth of population and increase in insanity has been greatest. In this state the population increase was 9.84 per cent, as compared with a percentage of increase of insane in institutions of 27.38. The neighboring state of Indiana shows an even greater disparity, with percentages of 4.64 and 27.44 respectively.

"Is there anything you want?" she asked one day, and there were several shades of meaning in her tone.

The young man glanced at her and said:

"Will you let me have a k-k-k——"

The maiden blushed violently at this significant sound and threw a glance of triumph at the other waitresses.

"——a k-k-cup?" finished the young man.

The girl blushed deeper than ever at this and the young man went on:

"I kn-know why you're blushing. You thought I was g-going to ask for a k-k-k-clean cup!"

GRAVEL ROAD WORK

Construction Is Usually Divided Into Two Entire Distinct Classes.

SUBGRADE FOR THE SURFACE

Some of Most Important Details Requiring Careful Attention Are Frequently Overlooked — Some Precautions to Observe.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Figure 1 shows a typical cross section for a gravel-road surface and indicates the customary steps involved in the construction of such a surface. The limiting thicknesses shown on this cross section are by no means followed universally, but are believed to represent the best current practice. The minimum thickness shown is supposed to be employed where the traffic is light and the subgrade is uniformly stable, while the maximum thickness is adapted for opposite conditions. Perhaps the most usual compacted thickness of surface is eight inches at the center and six inches at the edges. The difference in thickness between the edges and center is effected by making the crown of the subgrade flatter than that of the surface.

The construction of a gravel road usually is divided into two entirely distinct classes of work. The work of grading and preparing the subgrade falls into one class, and that of hauling, spreading and compacting the gravel into the other. The first class of work has been discussed at considerable length in connection with earth and sand-clay roads, but since it is desired to emphasize certain features of subgrade preparation that are of increased importance in connection with gravel-road construction, both classes of work will be considered in the following discussion:

Preparation of the Subgrade.

In grading the roadbed and preparing the subgrade for a gravel surface, it should be borne in mind also that the more expensive a road surface, the greater should be the care exercised to prevent it from being damaged through settlement or upheaval of the subgrade, and the greater should be the accuracy with which the subgrade is constructed, so that no unnecessary surfacing material may be required to correct irregularities in grade and cross section. No matter what the soil conditions may be, the subgrade for a gravel road surface, when completed, should conform closely in grade and cross section with the requirements of the plans and should present an even, uniform appearance. Also, it should be as firm and unyielding as the conditions will permit.

Some of the most important details requiring careful attention in preparing the subgrade, and which are perhaps most frequently overlooked, are (1) backfilling culvert trenches so as to prevent subsequent settlement, (2) exclusion of vegetable matter from fills, (3) provision for draining wet-weather springs which occur in the subgrade, and (4) the matter of thoroughly loosening and distributing the materials contained in old road crusts.

After the roadbed has been graded and drained properly, and the details mentioned above have received proper attention, the work of preparing the subgrade consists simply in forming a trench, as shown in figure 1, to receive the gravel surface. The trench may be formed largely with a grading machine, but the final shaping should be effected by means of picks and shovels and rolling. It is customary to provide grade stakes at intervals of about 50 feet, to serve as a guide for the pick and shovel work, and where extreme accuracy is desired cords may be stretched between the stakes to insure that the subgrade conforms to the required grade throughout. The rolling is done ordinarily with a power roller weighing about ten tons.

In order that the subgrade may be well drained during the process of spreading and compacting the gravel it is frequently necessary to provide shoulder drains at comparatively short intervals. Such drains are constructed by opening small ditches through the shoulders and partially filling them with gravel.

The Gravel Surface.

The principal precautions to observe in constructing a gravel road surface, after the subgrade is prepared, may be commented upon briefly as follows:

1. The gravel should be delivered on the work in wagons or cars especially adapted for spreading each load uniformly over that part of the subgrade for which it is intended. Where loads are dumped all in one spot and spread later with shovels, as is done frequently, it is very difficult to secure uniform density of the surface crust by subsequent harrowing and rolling. The spots where the loads are dumped nearly always will be more densely compacted than the areas between, and, as a result, uneven settlement will develop soon.

2. The gravel should be spread in two or more courses, and the thickness of the different courses should be approximately the same, except that the first course may be made somewhat thicker than the succeeding courses, because, in general, a thicker layer of gravel may be compacted on the subgrade than when spread over a layer of gravel already compacted. It usually is impracticable to have the compacted thickness of any course greater than about 5 inches, and quite frequently 3 or 4 inches is as much as can be compacted satisfactorily at one time.

3. After each course of gravel is spread it should be harrowed with a tooth harrow until the various sizes of particles and the binder or cementing material are distributed thoroughly through the mass. Then it should be compacted by rolling with a power roller weighing about 10 tons, or by means of traffic. Where a roller is employed the rolling should be continued until the particles of gravel are all well bonded together and the surface presents a smooth, uniform appearance. When completed, the surface of each course should be so firm and unyielding that it will not be disturbed in any way by subsequent traffic.

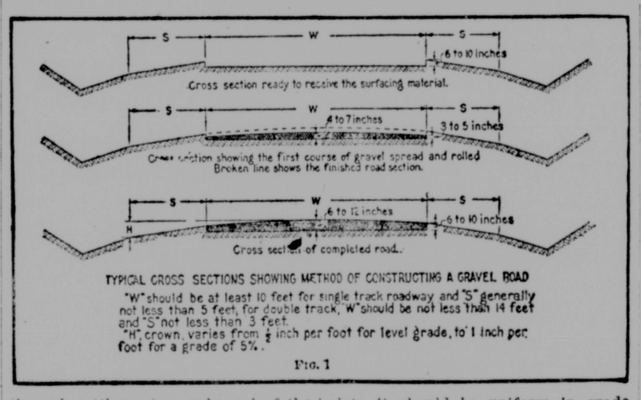
4. Where it is necessary to add sand or clay to the gravel in order to fill the voids, it should be done after each course is spread and before it is harrowed, except that with some kinds of gravel it may be permissible to add a limited amount of fine material to the surface of the top course after the harrowing is completed and the rolling is in progress.

5. Where the binder consists of some material other than clay, it may be desirable to sprinkle each course with water while it is being rolled, and even where clay is used as a binder a small amount of sprinkling may be necessary in dry weather in order to secure a satisfactory bond. The sprinkling always should be done uniformly and in such quantities as not to wash the fine material out from the gravel or to soften the subgrade.

6. When the road surface is complete it should be uniform in grade and cross section. If depressions occur under the roller they should be corrected by adding gravel and continuing the rolling, and this should be kept up until no depressions or appreciable waves are produced by the roller in moving back and forth over the surface.

7. After the road is opened to traffic it should be watched very carefully for several months and all defects which develop should be corrected immediately. The work of maintaining the road until the surface no longer "picks up" or ravels under traffic should be considered an essential feature of the construction. When traffic is depended upon to compact the gravel, much dragging usually is necessary in order to secure a smooth, well-bonded surface. In fact, the cost of dragging, under such conditions, frequently may exceed the cost of securing a well-bonded surface by means of rolling.

The construction method described above is modified quite frequently by omitting the subgrade trench and the rolling. The practice followed in many localities is simply to grade up the roadbed and heap gravel along the central portion. Traffic is then depended upon to spread and compact the gravel and produce a uniform surface. While some of the roads constructed in this way are great improvements over the original earth roads they are nearly always crowned too much for comfortable driving, and seldom wear as well as when the more careful method of construction is followed. It is believed, therefore, that in the long run it usually pays to employ a trenched subgrade and to compact the surface by rolling, though a possible exception to the economy of a trenched subgrade may exist where good gravel may be obtained very cheap. In this case it may be cheaper to surface the entire roadway than to incur the additional expense of trenching and constructing earth shoulders.



TYPICAL CROSS SECTIONS SHOWING METHOD OF CONSTRUCTING A GRAVEL ROAD

Horse Chestnuts as Food.

An effort is being made to adapt the horse chestnuts to the human dietary. The nuts are more than half starch and sugar, with some protein and fat, and are nutritious. Their value chiefly depends on the elimination of the bitter elements and the irritating saponin-like glucosides.

Some men invest in hair tonic as soon as they begin to come out on top.

Daily Thought.

God is love. Therefore love. Without distinction, without calculation, without procrastination, love. Lavish it upon the poor, where it is very easy; especially upon the rich, who often need it most; most of all upon our equals, where it is very difficult, and for whom perhaps we do least of all.—H. Drummond.

Our Difficult Language.

Apropos of the difficulties that our foreign-born friends experience in learning "United States," a subscriber writes: "A boy born a Dane and raised in a German family came to me and said: 'Will you borrow me your wheelbarrow?' and when he saw me smile he said, 'I mean, can I lend it from you?'"—Outlook.

Kieff Is Picturesque.

The most beautiful city in Russia is said to be, not Petrograd or Moscow, which lack perspective, the one lying flat on the level of the Niva, and the other situated on an insignificant stream, but Kieff, the ancient capital of the Cossacks, which lies on the heights overlooking the rolling Dnieper.

LIMBS MADE OF CARDBOARD

Artificial Leg, Invented by Danish Doctor, Enables Wearer to Walk Soon After Amputation.

A Danish doctor at a hospital in Paris has invented a cardboard leg which enables the wearer to go about without crutches two days after his limb has been amputated.

The materials used are two sheets of cardboard about three-sixteenth of an inch thick, and bandages soaked in a starch solution. After careful measurements have been taken the cardboard is cut into what looks like two peg-tops, which after being soaked in the bath fold round each other and are secured with bandages.

The principle is that of an egg in a cup, and the patient can wear the leg long before the wound is completely healed. He can thus get air and exercise, which it is usually impossible to obtain at this phase of his convalescence; also he has to suffer none of the inconveniences of crutches, a stick sufficing for his needs. The leg, properly treated, lasts from six months to a year, by which time a permanent artificial limb is ready to be fitted.

Not What He Said.

Something went wrong and the soldiers found themselves trying to march over a 6-foot fence.

The lieutenant halted the company and said:

"Men, why don't you do what I want you to do instead of what I tell you to do?"—Indianapolis News.

The Reason.

"Let that man down easy."

"Why should I?"

"Because he's so hard up."

WOMAN NOW IN PERFECT HEALTH

What Came From Reading a Pinkham Advertisement.

Paterson, N. J. — "I thank you for the Lydia E. Pinkham remedies as they have made me well and healthy. Sometime ago I felt so run down, had pains in my back and side, was very irregular, tired, nervous, had such bad dreams, did not feel like eating and had short breath. I read your advertisement in the newspapers and decided to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It worked from the first bottle, so I took a second and a third, also a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Purifier, and now I am just as well as any other woman. I advise every woman, single or married, who is troubled with any of the aforesaid ailments, to try your wonderful Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and I am sure they will help her to get rid of her troubles as they did me." — Mrs. Elsie J. Youthful Philosophy.

"My mother is much prettier than your mother," proudly declared Hazel. "No she isn't; she isn't half as pretty as my mamma. I've got the prettiest mother in the whole world!" proclaimed Nellie. Hazel was staggered for a moment and then complacently remarked: "Well, it isn't so much what we has as what we thinks we has that counts, I s'pose."

Camphor Trees Profitable.

The camphor tree is one of the many plant importations from China that promise much in the United States. The trees grow well in hedges 15 feet apart in the South and the average of eight tons of clippings per acre yields on distillation about 200 pounds of camphor. This means a present profit of more than $150.

For a Headache.

A throbbing, pulsating head will often feel relieved on the application of a cold compress. A foot bath, too, will aid, as it draws the blood away from the head. If neither of the above remedies avail, try applying hot and cold cloths alternately to the back of the neck.

A Wise Prevision.

The witty journalist was conversing with a friend about raising carp in ponds for food. The friend remarked that such a food supply would not be much in demand here, but that the Germans liked carp.

"Germans will eat anything," remarked the witty journalist, but immediately qualified his remark. "That is, when they can get anything to eat."

Just So.

"Mrs. Jones told me those new furs of hers came from the arctic regions."

"What a far-fetched story!"

NAPOLEON'S MISTAKE

It was while Napoleon was fighting the English that Fulton the inventor of the Steamboat, sought an interview with him for the purpose of interesting him in the project.

Napoleon wouldn't even see him.

It is now generally conceded that the steamboat would have enabled Napoleon to baffle the winds and tides of the English Channel, land an army in England, and defeat the English.

BALTIMORE CITY COLLEGE

To Whom It May Concern:

I have know Mr. Charles S. Catherman for the past nine or ten years both as a teacher and as a superintendent engaged in commercial education.

Mr. Catherman is a gentleman of attractive personality, who, as a teacher commands the highest respect and regard of his pupils, not only because they enjoy his pleasing manner and attitude of absolute fairness, but also because they are impressed with his practical as well as theoretical, knowledge of business subjects.

As a superintendent, Mr. Catherman enjoys the distinction of having developed what is conceded to be in the business men, the most efficient business colleges in the city of Baltimore. My own experience, together with that of many others known to me, is that he could always be depended upon to measure up in every way to whatever he promised a student or prospective pupil. The succession business of the great majority of his students attests the high degree of efficiency obtained by the school under his direction.

Very respectfully,
JOHN ANGEL KRATZ,

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

Notice of Appointment of Substitute Judge of Election.

Notice is hereby given by the Board of Supervisors of Elections of Garrett county, Maryland, that the following appointment to fill a vacancy has been made this 6th day of September, 1917:

Alonzo Fisher, Republican, whose postoffice address is Bloomington, Md., appointed Judge of Election for District No. 4, vice Edward E. Warnick, appointed Officer of Registration and Judge of Election.

By order of the Board of Supervisors of Elections of Garrett county, Maryland.

H. A. RASCHE, Clerk.

Mr. T. W. Casteel Wants to See The Voters.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Please allow me a small space in your columns to thank my friends and voters for the vote they gave me at the primary, and am more thankful and proud of my home districts, No. 6, where I was born 67 years ago, and Nos. 7 and 14, where I have lived for 61 years. It was not that I did not deserve the office that I was defeated for I have paid thousands of dollars for schools and roads and I did not get the money from the county to do it. I did not seek the office for honor or profit, but thought I could save the taxpayers some money.

There were two elements that defeated me. First, the party that claimed to be my friend and was not; the second was that I did not want to levy $50,000, for a school house in Oakland when four-fifths of the voters said not.

I am in favor of schools. If we had better teachers, seven months school and more study, I contend would be enough for the county to pay. If anyone wants their children in school longer let them pay for it.

I would like to see every man in person before Nov. 7th, if I could, that voted for me.

I would like to hear from others in regard to the schools.

T. W. CASTEEL.

The cost of fitting out each infantryman for service in France is $156.30, and more than one-fourth of this expenditure goes into the cost of his fighting equipment. Figures made public by the war department show that the cost of the infantryman's clothing is $101.21, of his fighting equipment $47.36 and of his eating utensils $7.73. Each infantryman will be equipped with fifty articles of clothing, 107 articles in his fighting equipment and eleven eating utensils. The items under fighting equipment are as follows:

The so called Enfield rifle used by British troops is being manufactured to equip other American troops and is officially known as the "United States, rifle model 1917." THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 42. OAKLAND, MARYLAND THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1917. NUMBER 32

67 SELECTED MEN LEFT FRIDAY

For Camp Meade, While Another Lot of Thirty Went Yesterday.

One of the most impressive ceremonies ever held in Oakland was the farewell ovation given the first 67 of the Garrett county boys who left here on Friday last for Camp Meade. The demonstration, which was held in the Empire Theatre on Thursday evening was elaborate and highly befitting the occasion, the only thing lacking being the absence of a brass band which could not be secured for the evening, but this was made up for to a great extent on Friday when the Aurora band was secured which escorted the men from the Court House to the Baltimore and Ohio station.

On Thursday many of the private residences and nearly every business house in the town were decorated with the American flag and bunting in profusion.

The demonstration Thursday evening was under the auspices of the local Red Cross society and was held in the Empire Theatre. Never before was the building packed as it was upon this memorable night. Hundreds of Garrett countians, besides the relatives and friends of the embryo soldiers, came to Oakland that evening from great distances, to have part in the good-bye demonstration.

The men, as was stated in these columns last week, began to arrive here early in the morning, accompanied by their parents, their sisters and in many cases by their sweetheart. At four o'clock in the afternoon they reported at the Court House where they received their instructions from the Local Board. They were placed in squads of a dozen or more and given in charge of one of their number. Capt. R. C. Townshend being selected to look after the welfare and entertainment of the men while they remained in town. They were marched in squads to the various boarding houses and hotels in town where they had supper, were provided with rooms and were breakfasted on Thursday morning. The Local Board appointed Milton Sincell as the "captain" after the men were checked in and they were told that after the train left they would be under his command until they reached Camp Meade.

At eight o'clock the men appeared at the Empire Theatre, which had been decorated in their honor, where the evening's entertainment took place. As chairman of the Defense Committee for Garrett county, Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill presided. In the course of his remarks Mr. Hamill reviewed the incidents which brought this country into war with Germany, and spoke encouragingly to the men before him, stating that he felt all would acquit themselves as true soldiers of Liberty and that every Garrett countain would feel proud of her native sons once they were in a position to do the work they were called upon to do. Mr. Hamill, in closing his remarks referred to the splendid work accomplished by the Red Cross Society and entreated his audience to lend the noble women composing it their best endeavors so that the work may be carried on.

Rev. S. E. Wicker was the next speaker who presented to each man a testament. He was followed by the Rev. A. D. Appleton, who spoke, as always, words of encouragement and directed the attention of his audience to the brighter things of life. Rev. Dr. Ely was the last speaker of the evening. His address will be long remembered. It was filled with patriotic utterances and words of cheer for the boys going and the parents and friends left behind.

Following the addresses a moving picture show was provided by the management of the theatre.

On Friday morning the saddest scenes in the history of town occurred at the station when the final farewells were said by the parents and friends of the boys after they had entrained. As the train moved out an effort was made to give them a cheer. Notwithstanding the CAMP MEADE, MD., October 1.

Editor The Republican, Oakland, Md.

MY DEAR SIR: We arrived safely in camp and most everyone is well and getting along fine with our drills, considering the time we have been here.

Now, we want to ask a favor of you, as well as The Democrat, and that is if you will start a public subscription through the columns of your paper to raise enough money to buy us a victrola and some records, as the time when off duty would pass much faster if we had a victrola to cheer up the boys from "Old Garrett," and serve to keep them from getting blue.

Mr. Allen, the traveling passenger agent of the B. & O. R. R., who had charge of our train coming down, said: "The boys from Garrett county were the finest bunch I have so far taken to any camp," and he has been moving troops all summer. So you see we proved to all that we were gentlemen. The same thing was said by the officer in command of our company.

There are 250 men to a company now. Part of our company are from Baltimore and Allegany county.

Will write you more next week and sincerely hope you will start the Victrola fund this week.

With best wishes from all the boys believe us to be,

Very sincerely yours,

GIRL KILLED ON PIKE SUNDAY

Miss Pearl Garlitz, Fatally Injured at a Point Near Frostburg.

Miss Pearl Garlitz, aged thirteen years, was killed about half past four o'clock Sunday afternoon while walking along the National Pike, two miles west of Frostburg, just over the line in Garrett county.

The unfortunate young girl was struck by a large Cole 8 touring car driven by J. E. Stottler, of Friendsville. Her skull was fractured and her death occurred within a very short time after the accident occurred.

Miss Garlitz had spent the week in Frostburg with her uncle, Mr. R. F. Robinson, who lives at 208 Mechanic street in that town and was returning to her home located two miles south of Johnson's on the Pike, and along the Savage Mountain, being in company with her sister, Miss Ida Garlitz, and two cousins, Miss Hazel and Mr. Nelson Robinson, and also by Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Minnick. It is said that the girls were walking along the Pike with arms locked when upon the approach of the automobile Miss Garlitz pulled away from the other girls, ran across the road and stepped directly in front of the speeding car.

The injured girl was taken to the Miners' Hospital in Frostburg in the car that struck her and her sister, who suffered greatly from shock was taken to her home in the car of I. T. Holland, of Cumberland, who happened along about the time of the accident. On reaching the Garlitz home Mr. Holland took the father of the dead girl to Frostburg.

Dr. Lininger, of Frostburg, who made an examination of the body of the young girl, stated that the cause of death was a fracture of the skull at the base of her brain and that it was evident she had been struck by the fender of the automobile.

Wild Life Protection . . . By Frederick J. Haskin.

Despite the war the Permanent Wild Life Protection Fund is continuing its battle to save American game from extermination. War is a benefit to wild life in that it takes many hunters out of the field and has raised the average price of guns and ammunition about 50 per cent, making hunting what it is rapidly becoming in this country anyway—a rich man's sport.

But hunting should not be a rich man's sport. Game should be abundant enough in this country so that every man who liked the outdoors could have his days afield and his share of the game without the expense of a long journey or of belonging to a club which maintains a game preserve. The far corners of the wilderness and the game preserves are the only places where any wild life will remain in a few years if the cause of protection is neglected.

These are the facts which the Wild Life Protection Fund is trying to bring home to the American people. Apathy and failure to realize the facts are the difficulties encountered.

Between 3,000,000 and 5,000,000 men go hunting in the United States every year. Once a hunter, always a hunter. There is not one of these men but wants the sport to continue and wants his son to enjoy it, too. These men cannot fail to observe that the game is decreasing year by year, but most of them do not realize how widespread and rapid the decrease is, that nothing but concerted action all over the United States can stop it.

In addition to these sportsmen there are the large and substantial interests that depend upon recreation seekers for business, wholly or in part—hotels, guides, lines of transportation. Most of them are in favor of some degree of protection, but oppose the long closed seasons for a period of years which are now the only means that can save the game.

The Wild Life Protection Fund, in its literature and the lectures of its distinguished campaigning trustee, William T. Hornaday of the New York Zoological Park, is seeking to spread the idea that the sportsmen must act to save the game, that they are robbing themselves and future generations if they do not.

Another difficulty in the path of game preservation lies in the opposition in Congress to Federal action in the matter. Nothing but Federal action saved the wild fowl. By reason of the migratory game law, drawn by government scientists and providing protection for water fowl from Canada to Mexico, they are now believed to be safe for 100 years.

Nothing but Federal action can save the big game of the West, which is dwindling at a rate that promises early extermination of many species. The case of Colorado is typical. No longer ago than 1900 deer to the number of 8000 were killed in Routt county alone. Now deer are scarce throughout the state and are protected at all times of the year in an effort to save them from extermination.

The fact which the average sportsman does not realize is that when a species of wild game is reduced to a certain point it cannot "come back," no matter how much it is protected.

For example in 1884 the buffalo hunters said and believed that there would always be plenty of buffalo. In 1885 they went out to hunt them and there were none. It took them two years to realize the fact that the buffalo were practically extinct. Wolves and hunters destroyed the remnant much faster than it could breed.

Of course the buffalo has been overworked as an object lesson in game protection. As opponents of protective measures have been pointed out, the buffalo could not have survived civilization except in very limited numbers anyway.

But this is not true of deer, elk and mountain sheep which inhabit the high mountain ranges that will always be a wilderness. There is only one measure which can save them and that is the provision of game refuges on national forests where these animals can breed unmolested and the increase restock the surrounding country.

The plan proposed by the Wild Life Protective Fund is for a chain of these refuges which would dot the Rocky Mountain region from one end of the country to the other. They would in no way interfere with stock-raising or mining. The regulations could be quite effectively enforced by national forest officers. Such a law would mean the certain saving of big game in many sections and it would probably lead to its increase throughout the Rocky Mountain region.

In view of the increasing use of the national forests as playgrounds by the whole American people, this measure is of national interest and importance and it would not really or seriously injure any interests. Yet because certain livestock interests do not want the bill passed it has never gotten before Congress.

In the last session such a bill was introduced by Representative Hayden in the House and Senator Chamberlain in the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, where it was opposed in hearings by Representative Mondell of Wyoming, despite the fact that Mr. Hornaday produced a long list of Wyoming sportsmen and officials, including the Governor, who favored the passage of the bill.

Nevertheless the committee made a favorable report on the measure, but it died with the session and has never been revived in this Congress.

Every man who hunts and wants his son to hunt; who values the wild life of his country for any reason, practical or aesthetic, should urge upon his congressman the passage of this legislation.

Camp Meade . . . . . Sidelights

Maj. M. J. Pickering of the University of Pennsylvania is the official athletic officer for Camp Meade. He is a man who knows how to put snap in every athletic sport.

"The army is run by civilians now," was the blunt statement of an officer the other day to the newspaper men, but he at once made it clear that he favors the new ways of the new era. The first civilian to get on the job here was Kenneth Clark, who used to write music for the Princeton Triangle Club. All the Princeton men who recall Mr. Clark's work will not be surprised at his success in this. Here is a civilian who has done wonders at this camp in a way that he never could have done in a uniform. He gets right to the men—thousands of them at a time.

Other civilians are on the way here to do things never done before in an army. They are to help in that most delicate job of fitting square pegs into square holes. It is said—although the name could not be learned—that a man was passed as fit for service who has two fingers off one hand. There are a great many jobs in the army where brains count more than fingers. These civilian personnel advisers will handle such cases as that.

The boxing here at camp is of a kind to please the lovers of that sport. Many men here came from places where there was an almost unbelievable prejudice against this sport. For them it is a great treat that is offered one or two nights a week on the Y. M. C. A. lots.

"Hill 300" is the name given to one of the funny little lumps of land. Captains seem to enjoy leading their companies up and down there. The time for charging has not come yet, but it is easy to see that the movements now are preliminary to something more strenuous.

The daredevils of the hour are the chauffeurs. Nearly everybody who has business of importance travels from Admiral to Naval Academy Junction by jitney and nearly everybody wants to catch a train in a hurry. The result is that the wildest kind of chances are taken. Many machines are smashed up. One day this week the front end was torn off a Ford by a Pennsylvania express at Odenton. Up on the Portland road another car was almost junked. Every effort to get exact details about one accident brought out reports of others. The daredevil spirit is in the air. Wrecks by the roadside do not serve as a warning. The News man asked a chauffeur his name and the latter said Lawrence Grim.

Booze gets into the five-mile zone in spite of military police, guards and sleuths. Persons caught with loaded bottles are taken to the guardhouse and locked up pending investigation. The handling of these cases is to be more severe now that so many soldiers are at the camp. Bootleggers are taking a long chance.

General Kuhn believes in muscle, and it is clear to any observer that he has not spared himself. He is the picture of fitness. If he ever has occasion to send out a smash with that fist of his it will make a dent in something. There is a real dynamo up on "tower hill," the name given to the lump upon which headquarters is perched.

"We are all learning something," said Joseph Annin, a New York Sun man, who was at the border last year, and is now with the District of Columbia machine gunners. "Everybody has stopped calling the officers 'brother.'" Annin reported for duty clad in a full uniform. He says it's much more fun to be in the game than to be writing about it. Who can doubt that?

When the draft came along Leon Kidwell was a floor manager in Goldenberg's in Washington. Now he is drilling five hours a day in God's open country, and there is a smile on his face and a clear ring in his voice that no man ever acquired in a department store. Leon has forgotten all about ribbons and laces, and he is anxious only to note the latest frills in machine guns.

The end of a perfect day comes at 9:45 p. m. Every muscle is tired by then and when the lights go out the darkness seems very soothing. The sounds of insect life fill the silence. Tired men sleep very soundly with a few exceptions. One exception was of a man who sat up in his cot and insisted on going through calisthenics. Many dream of battles, of the day when they will "go over the top." What puts an end to dreams is the sound of the bugle. This gives the soldier his first real desire for bloodshed. Oh, what joy to slay that bugler and the other buglers, those miles away across No Man's Land!

The keen eyes of General Kuhn do not miss any sidelights upon camp life. The Three Hundredth and Fifteenth Regiment has put a fence around the open space in front of its headquarters. The fence was made of bits of lumber off the waste pile, but is a creditable job. Another unit has sawed its numerals out of wood, painted the wood white and set up a sign that appeals to critics of such efforts. General Kuhn, pleased by all this progressiveness, asked: "Where did they get the paint?" That's a mystery. This is a paintless place, except for the Y. M. C. A., which has given its structures a verdant green staining.

TO PUBLISH CASUALTIES

Information Will Be Quickly Given to Relatives of U. S. Soldiers.

Preparations for the handling of the casualty lists that must come before long from the American headquarters in France have practically been completed by the War Department at Washington.

With the aid of the most complex card-index system ever devised for an army, and with the assistance of identification marks to be given each soldier, Uncle Sam means to see to it that no mistakes are made and that the relatives of soldiers killed, wounded or taken prisoner in battle are not kept in suspense longer than absolutely necessary before knowing their fate.

Already there is under way the establishment of an enormous statistical division, with headquarters in Washington and a branch in Paris. It will be the function of this division to keep a card index record of every soldier of the United States, whether he is at the front in Europe or on duty in this country. Officers and men are to be indexed by name and the cards kept in alphabetical order for immediate checking up with the lists of casualties or with army orders. On the card of each man will be the name and address of his "next of kin" to whom news of him will be sent should occasion require.

Originally it had been the intention to catalogue the men by numbers, but this plan has been abandoned. Nor will the soldiers at the front have only numbered tags for their identification. It is probable that each one will wear about his neck and underneath his clothing a small aluminum tag bearing his name and company, and that the system now in vogue in the regular army, along these lines, will be extended to the National Guardsmen and National Army men.

Not only will the card index cover the men actually in the various fighting corps, but engineers, civilians, war correspondents and others attached in any way to the armed forces.

Major J. J. Jones, of the Adjutant General's Department, has been designated to be at the head of the statistical division at this end and will generally supervise the work.

It is the purpose to keep up the records both here and at the branch office in Paris strictly up to date, and the promise is made that casualties will be made public as rapidly as verifications can be obtained.

The branch in Paris will see to it that the men are listed both by regiments and alphabetically. There will be duplicate sets of these records kept in Washington so that the casualty lists can be checked up in the quickest possible manner. Should the report come, for example, that John Doe, of "X" Regiment, was killed, that comparison with the official records showed that there was no John Doe on the roster of "X" Regiment it would be plain that a mistake had been made in reporting a casualty.

It will be the duty of the statistical division in all cases to notify relatives of soldiers who are killed, wounded or missing.

With regard to the missing men, it is understood that the American Red Cross will adopt the British Red Cross system of following up the missing men and, if possible, ascertaining whether they have been made prisoners and at what prison camps they are confined. That done, the Red Cross, it is understood, will see to it, through the aid of neutral governments, that the "prisoners packets," which the British Red Cross has used to such good advantage, are sent regularly through the lines to these men. These packets will consist of supplies of foodstuffs of a non-perishable and easily handled character and such other articles as might contribute to the comfort of the recipients. It has been one of the willingly assumed tasks of neutral nations in this war to have their representatives in the opposing countries look after these matters in a general way.

PREPARING THE BEES FOR WINTER

College Park, Sept. 13.—Successful wintering should bring the colonies into spring crowded with young vigorous workers ready for the early nectar flows; yet with sufficient stores remaining in the hives to carry them if necessary well into the season. These conditions can only be obtained when the colonies are properly cared for in the fall.

It will not be necessary for the beekeeper to even visit his yard until the next season is well advanced if the bees are well supplied with food, room, and protection this fall. It is argued that if food be sufficient and the colony be headed by a young queen and sheltered from the wind extra protection is not necessary. This is not true. One does not have to be a careful investigator to prove the necessity for added protection.

Bees cluster in winter for mutual warmth. The lower the outside temperature gets the more food the bees consume and the greater the muscular activity within this cluster. This maintains a temperature sufficient to keep the cluster warm. Six months of cold weather demanding such excessive activity and food consumption leaves the bees so weak in the spring and so affected with dysentery from faecal matter that while they may at first seem strong they die faster than brood is reared to replace them. Thus the colonies become too weakened to take advantage of our early nectar flows.

If the bees are protected from the cold by packing these conditions are relieved and the colonies will come into the spring strong and healthy, provided they were well supplied with food and bees in the fall.

Colonies may be packed in groups of four, a pair facing east and a pair west, or they may be packed singly. They should be set on two by four boards, edge up, on a platform raised slightly from the ground, and surrounded with a tight packing case large enough to leave a six-inch space all around the colonies and on top. This space may then be filled with sawdust, leaves, chaff, or pine needles. A boar tunnel may be constructed from the hive entrances to the case and four half-inch holes bored through the latter into the tunnels thus allowing air to reach the colonies and providing for flights in early spring. A tight cover over all completes the snug nest, which if sheltered from the winds will bring the colonies into spring very strong and vigorous.

The packing should be done in early fall and left until May of the following season. If the bees are in double bodies with the upper one filled with honey the results will be still more satisfactory as the colonies will have plenty of room in the spring to rear brood and plenty of food to build up sufficiently for the early honey flows.

Few beekeepers at present pack their bees. They argue very persistently against it; but the majority of us are from Missouri and a fair trial will convince the open minded that winter protection and shelter are as essential to honey production as brood and bees.

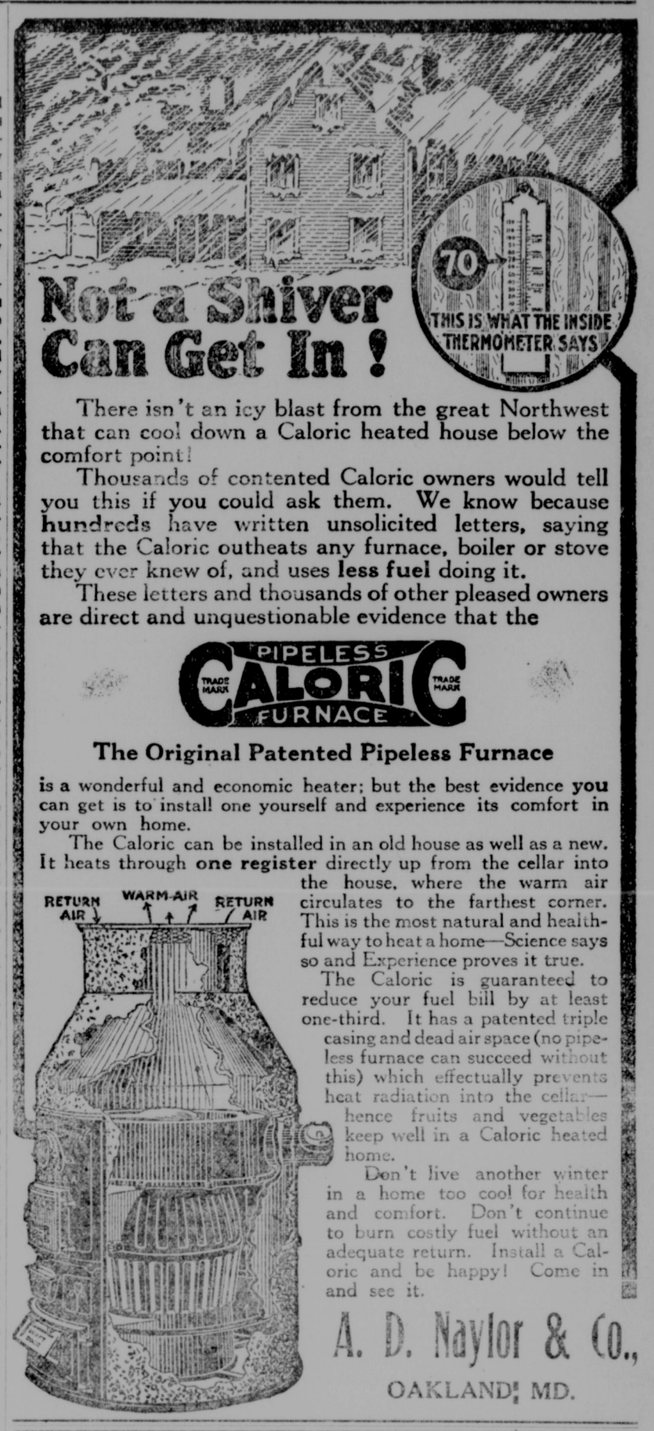
BALANCE THE "PACKING."

College Park, Sept. 13.—"Balance the 'packing' is the admonition which Poultryman Roy H. Waite, of the Agricultural Experiment Station, is sending out to poultry raisers over the State, dealing with the proper mixing of concentrated foods and roughages for poultry of all classes. A part of this appears herewith:

"Hens have to have a certain amount of 'packing' in their digestive organs if they are to feel comfortable. Under natural conditions birds (hens are birds) pick up all sorts of coarse material. Their digestive system is arranged to handle this kind of stuff. Hens eat grass, weed leaves, big coarse bugs, juicy fruit. They will even eat corn leaves, clover and sand, and when hard pressed for roughage or filler will even eat leaves from trees, paper or almost anything that will give them the comfortable feeling of fullness.

"There are two extremes to which you can go in feeding poultry. You can let the hens live entirely on this roughage or you can keep them on a diet of nothing but concentrated feeds. From the standpoint of the poultryman one extreme is as bad as the other. Both reach the same end. Only they travel in a different direction. They meet around the turn. Neither method will produce a profit. One because the rough material will not furnish enough excess nourishment to make eggs, the other because so much expensive feed has been used in producing eggs that the cost of producing is about equal to the selling price. From the standpoint of the public welfare, however, overfeeding of concentrated feeds is much the worst offense at the present time because there is a shortage of this kind of material. In your feeding of poultry try to strike a happy medium. Don't make your hens fill up on concentrated feeds. Give them a chance to eat all the green material they want. There is no use in poisoning their systems with an excessive amount of nourishment. It isn't good for the hens, isn't good for your country and it isn't good for your pocketbook."

Eggs are high,—but so is feed. The careful feeding of high priced feeds should bring not only a profit, but a feeling of having done another "bit" along the lines of conservation.



Not a Shiver Can Get In!

There isn't an icy blast from the great Northwest that can cool down a Caloric heated house below the comfort point!

Thousands of contented Caloric owners would tell you this if you could ask them. We know because hundreds have written unsolicited letters, saying that the Caloric outheats any furnace, boiler or stove they ever knew of, and uses less fuel doing it.

These letters and thousands of other pleased owners are direct and unquestionable evidence that the

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE

The Original Patented Pipeless Furnace

is a wonderful and economic heater; but the best evidence you can get is to install one yourself and experience its comfort in your own home.

The Caloric can be installed in an old house as well as a new. It heats through one register directly up from the cellar into the house, where the warm air circulates to the farthest corner. This is the most natural and healthful way to heat a home—Science says so and Experience proves it true.

The Caloric is guaranteed to reduce your fuel bill by at least one-third. It has a patented triple casing and dead air space (no pipeless furnace can succeed without this) which effectually prevents heat radiation into the cellar—hence fruits and vegetables keep well in a Caloric heated home.

Don't live another winter in a home too cool for health and comfort. Don't continue to burn costly fuel without an adequate return. Install a Caloric and be happy! Come in and see it.

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

THE DEAD YEAR'S HARVEST

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

THERE was a quick call at the telephone, and Resilius Marvel seized the receiver as though he had been expecting a message. I knew by the expression of his eyes that the first word imparted over the wire met his anticipations. Then I heard him ask in rapid succession:

"Letters—numbers—series?"

He pencilled rapidly on his shirt cuff as the replies came.

"Verify," were his final words: "'E-296,701, Series of 1906.' Very well," and hung up the receiver and arose to his feet. "Come with me," he added simply, and I knew that the great head of the United Bankers' Protective association was started on another "case."

"'E. 1906,'" I observed with a sudden shock of memory as we reached the street—"if that applies to a one hundred dollar treasury note—"

"It does," vouchsafed Marvel tersely.

"Then you probably have the man."

"If instructions have been followed, yes," replied my friend.

"Who is it?"

"The Central National."

"That makes ten."

"You keep good tab," complimented Marvel—"exactly ten. What an optimist this original shover of the queer must be!"

Briefly, within a week ten counterfeit $100 notes had been passed upon the city banks. On a certain Monday morning a spruce, sprightly young man of about twenty-five had come into our institution and had presented himself at the paying teller's window with five $100 treasury notes. He asked to have them changed into bills of smaller denominations and was readily accommodated. The teller had noted they were comparatively new, that their serial numbers were consecutive. An expert glance satisfied him, however, that they were all right. They were placed with other hundreds to make up a package of twenty, or $1,000, and nothing more was thought of it.

Four mornings later Resilius Marvel came into the bank with No. 296,695 of the same series. Across its face was stamped the word "Counterfeit" in broad red letters taking in the full front surface of the note.

"Have you any of those?" he inquired, placing the bill before me.

"I will find out," I replied, and then rather wonderingly scanned the note. It would have passed muster with me, and I counted myself something of a specialist in my line.

It took half an hour to go the rounds of the cages. It is almost second nature for a teller to remember any bill he has handled, especially those of large denomination. The man who had changed the treasury notes for a stranger soon had the five in question in evidence.

Two more of the $100 notes turned up twenty-four hours later at another institution. Then two other banks each contributed like bills. In each case a smiling, easy-mannered young fellow had passed the notes. Marvel had named progress to me as it culminated. Now a tenth note had turned up. I accompanied him to the Central National.

The floor officer was waiting for Marvel, and knew him. There was a flutter of importance and excitement in his manner at being concerned in a professional transaction with the great head of the United Bankers' Protective association. He took us to the paying teller, saying nothing, but looking the part of an humble instrument of justice who had co-operated in "capturing a crook." The teller, looking wise and keen and in a suppressed way exultant, beckoned to us, and we went beyond the railing and around into an anteroom, where he joined us.

"There is one of the hundred you flagged for us, Mr. Marvel," he said, and handed a $100 bill to my friend.

Resilius Marvel nodded, gave the bill a close scrutiny, and returned it to the teller with the words: "Cancel it and preserve it for evidence. Where is the man?"

The teller slipped the note into his coat pocket and took out a key.

"This way," he directed, and we followed him down a narrow corridor. As he started to open a steel-studded door Marvel halted him.

"One moment," he said—"tell me the circumstances of the matter."

"Why, your warning had prepared us all, of course," explained the bank man. "When the fellow with his note presented it, I pretended to be called by my assistant in the next cage. I quietly pressed the call button, signaling what I wanted to the chief clerk's desk. He and the floor officer came up quietly. The man at the window looked amazed and indignant as the officer seized his arm. He demanded to know what his arrest meant. When I told him that the bill was counterfeit, it seemed to me as if all of a sudden some frightful suggestion drove his face colorless. He nearly fell to the floor. Now? Yes, Mr. Marvel," and the speaker unlocked the door. He started back as he opened it, and stared blankly at a man standing in the center of the place before a high desk with a table top.

"Too bad!" spoke Marvel quickly, as he crowded past our guide and his eye swept the room in his rapid, comprehensive way.

I did not make out what Marvel had taken in with that practised eye of his at a glance, until I had got nearly up to the desk, which I found was one used in sealing money envelopes. A strong gas jet was going. Near it were the steel dies, wax sticks and cord used in securing packages. The prisoner had evidently been busy during his brief period of forced retirement. A pair of small scissors and a safety razor lay on the table. Also, under the gas jet was quite a heap of fresh, warm cinders. The eyebrows of the captive were jagged and irregular, and his upper lip was rough and scraped.

"He has tried to disguise himself!" shouted the bank teller, instantly.

"To disfigure himself, you mean," interpolated Marvel. "He has done more than that. He has been busy removing all identification marks—papers, clothing tags—hello! what's this?"

From behind the man there suddenly sprang out a small lively dog. He was of the fox terrier breed, and barked at us lustily.

"Oh, the animal was with him when he came into the bank," explained the teller. "Followed him in here. Belongs to him, I suppose."

"I see," nodded my friend, thoughtfully. "Now, then, my man!"

He fixed his eye sharply on the prisoner. The latter did not flinch under the cynosure. He must have been a handsome appearing young man before he had jabbed those scissors into his eyebrows. He was very pale, but there was nothing of the cringing or alarmed culprit about him.

"I see it is useless to ask you your name," observed Marvel. "We will make a search, but I fancy you have forestalled what you were shrewd enough to suspect awaited you."

My friend was right. The man had cut off even the laundry marks on his linen, had removed every letter and card from his pocketbook, and had burned them on the marble top of the sealing table.

"You won't tell your name, of course," said Marvel. "Will you talk at all?"

"I will make only one statement," came the cool, composed reply.

"I shall be glad to receive it," replied Marvel.

"I did not know until half hour since that I was passing counterfeit money."

"You know it now?"

"Yes," came the response, accompanied with a tremor of the finely chiseled lips. "I had ten $100 bills, and I have passed them all."

"Where did you get them?"

"I will answer that question and rest my case there," was the singular reply. "After that it is up to you to do what you choose; and after that I shall absolutely refuse to say one word—I found them."

That was all—all at the start, all at the finish. Argument, menaces, cajolery, sympathy—these went for nothing. Marvel studied the prisoner silently. Then he whispered to the teller. The latter retired, to reappear with the floor officer. Marvel gave this man some low-toned instructions. The officer placed a come-along upon the wrist of the prisoner.

"You can leave the dog," spoke Marvel suddenly.

The prisoner turned and his lips parted. He was evidently about to put in a plea for the continued companionship of the little animal, whom he seemed to regard with fondness. With something of a sigh, he repressed utterance, however, pulled his hat down over his eyes and stolidly accompanied the officer from the place.

"Get me a piece of stout cord," Marvel directed the teller, and in another few minutes we were on our way to the offices of the United Bankers' Protective association. The little animal whined and worried, but trotted along, guided by Marvel. The latter turned the dog loose in an empty room and sat down in his own favorite chair in his private office.

"There is some thinking to do," he observed, "but I should like to have you back here about an hour before dusk."

I was curious enough and interested enough to greet the invitation as a favor, and said so.

"And by the way, my friend," he called after me as I reached the door, "that young man we have secured told the truth—he did not know the $100 bills were counterfeit until the teller at the Central National told him so."

I wondered how Resilius Marvel had found this out, but I knew he was right. He usually treasured up his deductions and discoveries until a case was ended. When he anticipated an announcement, I had found in the past, it was only when he was very sure of his ground.

When I reached his office again it was well on towards evening. Marvel was ready with the little fox terrier under his arm. With the animal, he led the way to an auto, and we proceeded back to the Central National.

The city center streets were comparatively deserted, as the business crowds had gone homewards some time since. Marvel carried the dog to the barred front of the bank, set the little animal on the pavement and returned to the machine.

"Just follow that dog," he ordered to the chauffeur, and fixed his eye closely upon the object of his interest.

The fox terrier crowded through the barred gate protecting the entrance to the bank, ran up to the great bronze doors and lifted its head and howled. Then it sniffed around in a circle, came out to the pavement, threw its nose up in the air in several directions and trotted down the street on a bee line.

There could be no doubt that the clever animal knew the way home, for it proved never at fault, never hesitated, and buckled down sturdily as if knowing it had a long jaunt ahead. This proved true. It made only square turns at corners, and gradually left the business center for the better residence portion of the city.

"Keep close," directed Marvel to the chauffeur as the animal reached a broad boulevard and increased its pace. "Follow," he ordered additionally, as the dog suddenly diverged from its course and turned down a broad alley. Then, as our forerunner reached an iron fence inclosing a garden and crowded through between two pickets, Marvel spoke one quick, imperative word: "Stop!" leaped out of the machine and ran up to the fence.

I could see beyond him. The dog had burst into a joyful bark, and almost instantly a stout woman, evidently a servant, crossed my range of vision. She caressed and talked to the leaping animal and walked to the fence, as if expecting that the animal's arrival prefaced that of its expected master. She came directly up to Marvel, the fence between them. He spoke to her and she answered him, took a look down the alley, and, turning, went back towards a pretentious appearing mansion facing the avenue.

"Drive to the next street and wait for us," Marvel said to the chauffeur, and beckoned me to join him.

"We will get around to the front of the house," he remarked, as we com[illegible] the length of the lane, and turn[illegible] carry out this plan. "That is the home of the dog. I asked the woman you saw if the dog belonged there."

"And she said yes?"

"With the addendum that its owner was the nephew of her master, and she wondered why he did not come home with the animal, as he usually did."

It was no task to locate the front of the lot where the dog had run to cover. It was an imposing stone structure. We halted in front of it, and my friend read aloud the name engraven on the broad old-style silver plate on one of the ornamental front doors:

"Arnold Buckingham."

Then Resilius Marvel looked at me, and my eyes meeting his expressive glance, full of wonder, reflected somewhat a manifest surprise, if not a positive shock in his own.

There was not a better name at the banks than that of Arnold Buckingham. Resilius Marvel knew it from hearsay, and I from practical knowledge of a financial responsibility rated way up in the millions. There could not help but be a direct challenge in my face. My companion simply shrugged his shoulders.

"Come," he said, his course of procedure boldly formulated in his mind within the space of a minute, and he led the way up the steps, rang the front door bell and stepped inside the vestibule.

I wondered what strange freak of fate had led us to this lordly mansion, to the presence of a man retired from active business with a royal fortune, his honored record a synonym for high business integrity, his name good for the entire reserve of our bank. I wondered, too, how my friend, skilled and all powerful as he was, would proceed in a case where the sure criminal trail led straight from the portals of a common prison to this abode of luxury and wealth. A servant answered a question put by Marvel, and ushered him into a majestic reception room, took his card, and we both arose as a man aged, austere, dignified, came into the apartment with an easy, old-fashioned sense of courtesy that charmed me. He had Marvel's card in his hand, and I fancied the name it bore had aroused him into curiosity or interest as to the personality it represented. Marvel weighed his man in the scales of a mature judgment, and went to the heart of his subject forthwith.

"I have come on an important and serious mission in behalf of the government, Mr. Buckingham," he announced.

"Of the—government?"

Very slowly, as though difficult of utterance, Mr. Buckingham pronounced that last word. I thought he quivered, I was sure his natural ruddy color lessened.

"You have a relative, a nephew, I understand," resumed Marvel; and then followed a rapid description of the young man who had passed the $100 counterfeits—plus his denuded mustache—building up a portrait that I saw at once was recognizable by our host.

"You are describing my nephew, Alan Dean," said Mr. Buckingham, steely cold, because he was controlling himself. "What of him, sir?"

"Just this, Mr. Buckingham: He is in my hands after passing ten counterfeit $100 treasury notes on the city banks."

"I HAVE COME ON AN IMPORTANT AND SERIOUS MISSION IN BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT, MR BUCKINGHAM," HE ANNOUNCED.

The old man, his hands grasping the arms of the chair, tried to hold himself together. He directed one look at Marvel—reproachful, pleading, a lost look. His were the eyes of a man who saw a stranger enter his presence and bring a stately fabric into the midst of sudden devastation and ruin.

"Where—where is my nephew?" his lips framed, rather than uttered. "How came he to find the notes—?"

It was an admission, and I noted Marvel's lips settle grimly—a point scored, a start made.

"If you had the notes in this house," he ventured audaciously, "what of the plates from which they were printed?"

"You know all! Then it is—ruin!" broke in a despairing cry from the old man's lips.

"Quick, call someone!" directed Marvel, as Buckingham fell to one side. A spasm convulsed his frame and he lay rigid and speechless. My friend had lifted him to an easier position, while I hastened to the hall and advised the servant there of his master's condition.

We waited until after a physician had been called. He shook his head seriously while they placed the millionaire on a couch. Then he went to work on him. His attitude became more reassuring as the patient recovered consciousness and looked about him in a bewildered way. Then as his eye fell on Marvel the old fright or fear, terror or apprehension, or whatever it was, came back into his face.

"Take," he urged, "a blank signed check. Fill in for any amount, only save—save my family from shame."

"And the plates?" gently but firmly persisted Marvel, waving back the proffered check.

"Come—come—" the tortured tones grew more feeble, "when I—I send for you."

We saw that he was going into another sinking spell. Marvel hastily summoned the physician, and we passed down the hall and out of the house. Silently my friend led the way to the machine awaiting us at the corner of the next street, reached his office, dismissed the chauffeur and nodded a casual adieu to myself.

I could not resist an impulse of intense curiosity and impatience to drop in upon him on my way to the bank the next morning. I found him with a newspaper folded across his knee and his eyes regarding it with a vexed expression.

"Did you see it?" he inquired.

I guessed what, and told him so, and ran hurriedly over an item announcing that a new $100 treasury note counterfeit—the particulars concerning which, even to the approximate serial numbers, were given—had appeared on the market.

"Some one has babbled," scolded my friend. "It may make a complication."

I did not see how, just then. I knew better—later. Marvel had nothing to impart to me of progress or importance in the case, but late that afternoon there came a hurry call for me from him. I closed my desk and was soon in his company.

He handed me a card which he took from an envelope. It read simply, in pencil scrawl: "I must see you.—A. B."

"I may need you," observed my friend, and after a half hour's spin we arrived at the home of the millionaire.

The servant who answered the summons at the door seemed to know we were expected. She led us down the hall to a sort of library, saying that Mr. Buckingham was engaged, but that she would announce our presence shortly. Then she left us alone in the room, half darkened by the approaching shadows of eventide.

I caught some rapid words from a room beyond the heavy draperies, evidently a smoking apartment off the library. I noted, however, that Marvel heard them quicker than I, for he moved from his seat to a chair closer to the masked doorway. The words, not in the tones of Mr. Buckingham, were rapid, insistent, almost menacing:

"The plates—the plates!"

There was an utterance akin to a groan, and it proceeded from the lips of the millionaire, I readily traced. Then the former voice, only clacking, wheedling and menacing at the same time, spoke again:

"Mr. Buckingham, I am here in the interests of a client who has one proposition to make to you. My promise ends with a distinct and final negative or affirmative. It places me in a regrettable and unfortunate position to be the representative of men who are dangerous criminals, but—I am a lawyer. Shall I briefly state the case?"

There was no reply, at least none audible to us. The speaker continued:

"Some years ago, your son Percival Buckingham, chief engraver for the government, was taken ill and removed to a sanitarium while you were absent in Europe. Too close application to delicate expert work had blighted his mind. He escaped from the sanitarium, and three men I will not name, but once known as the most finished shovers of the queer in the world, got hold of him. They saw their opportunity and improved it. They were shrewd, capable men and made no blunders. What they did you will now learn for the first time.

"Those men secured the upper floor of a lonely, secluded house. They fitted it up as nearly as possible like one of the work rooms in the treasury department. They took your deluded son there, and made him believe that he was producing new 1906 series $100 plates for the government. For nearly a year that was his home. His mind did not refuse to act mechanically along the line eye and skill had directed for so many years. In brief, he made two plates, so perfect that they were almost duplicates of the original government plates. Twelve impressions were made, and two of these were tested by being placed in circulation. Today they are somewhere in existence, their validity never doubted. Within that week it must have been, while unguarded and alone, your son had a flash of his old mentality. At all events, when his three captors returned they found him gone, and with him the two treasury plates and the ten printed $100 bills.

"Now for your end of the story, as I understand it: Your son appeared at this home, suddenly, unexpectedly. He must have brought the plates and the notes. You believed him a counterfeiter, for before he could explain to you, his insane mood returned. You at once removed him to a private asylum. Later you sent him with a relative, Alan Dean, to Paris. He regained his reason. Today he occupies a studio in the French capital, patronized by devotees of high art. Happily married, all that year of mental darkness forgotten, restored to his right mind, he is a wonderful producer of art etchings, a man of fame, and marvelously prosperous. You have been content to keep him out of the country. You never sought to enlighten him as to that lost year in his life."

"I know all this—why go over it!" came in muffled tones of suffering from the millionaire.

"So that the matter may be clearly understood between us," was the prompt response. "Within a week after your son's escape from the counterfeiters, one of their number came to see you. He caused you to believe that your son had deliberately left the government service to go into a scheme to secure millions by using his professional skill as a counterfeiter. You told him a lie. You led him to believe that your son had destroyed the ten treasury notes and the two plates. The man, however, threatened to find the son you had hidden away, to denounce him to the police as a dangerous counterfeiter. To silence this man, you paid $50,000, and that ended the matter for the time being."

"I know not how," continued the lawyer, "but my client, when today he saw the announcement in the newspapers that certain counterfeit $100 treasury notes of a certain series were in circulation, at once was forced to an irresistible conclusion. Those notes came from this house—they could come from nowhere else. Your nephew, only recently arrived from Paris, where your son is living, is missing from your home since yesterday. A man answering his description passed the notes. Putting this and that together, my client reasons that you have also the plates. He must have them."

Again a groan from the lips of the tortured man.

We heard a tottering step cross the floor. Marvel was at my side as the draperies were agitated. He reached me in a swift glide and drew me beside him to a curtained alcove in the library as Arnold Buckingham entered and turned on a light.

The old man's lips were trembling and he was whispering hoarsely to himself. His eyes were those of a man on the verge of losing his senses. He produced a key, opened a strong-box safe, and from some inner recess drew out two oblong pieces of metal. In a flash Marvel was at his side.

"On your life, not a word!" he abjured the shrinking, well-nigh stricken millionaire. "I will deal with the wretches who seek to blackmail you."

I pressed to the side of Buckingham and supported him, or he would have fallen. I saw Marvel hold the plates toward the light. He drew a magnifying glass from his pocket and looked them over.

What was the significance of the quick, momentary smile that crossed his lips, I knew not then. Before I could even conjecture a cause, he had parted the draperies, and I heard the lawyer's metallic voice exclaim:

"Resilius Marvel!"

"You know me," was the stern reply. "And I you, Israel Craft, disbarred attorney, fence, go-between and agent of the hunted and lost. You do well to strain the limit of justice to the danger point."

"I am within the law," crackled from the mean, servile lips.

"Admitted. What I wish to know is—have you the affidavits you boasted of to Mr. Arnold Buckingham a minute since?"

"I have."

"Will you add a statement of your knowledge of this unfortunate business?"

"For the plates—yes."

Marvel led the man into the library. He pointed to an open desk, and said simply:

"Write."

It was at the end of ten minutes that I saw Resilius Marvel receive into his hands four documents. He scrutinized them closely. Then he said:

"There are the plates. Now your men and my men are—quits."

I was amazed—more than that, petrified. I saw Marvel accompanying the lawyer to the door. Then, returning, he drew Buckingham aside. He conversed with him in low tones. At the end of ten minutes I saw hope and courage come into the face of the old man. It was the relief and gratitude of a person drawn from the edge of a fearsome precipice.

"The nephew who passed those notes, and who recently came from the son in Paris," explained Marvel as we left the mansion, "was told by Percy Buckingham that he might have what he found in his old home room. He stumbled across those counterfeit notes. The son is in happy ignorance of that blighted year in his life. The father need bear no further anxiety. He will reimburse the banks gladly, the affair must be hushed up, and the man who gets the plates—"

He paused in an impressive way. Then Resilius Marvel laughed—a low, strange laugh of intense satisfaction.

"But they have them! I do not understand," I floundered.

"They have them, yes," assented Marvel, "and so much worthless trumpery they are."

"I do not yet comprehend you."

"They bear a sure record, that in his lucid awakening the night of his escape, Percy Buckingham placed upon them," said Marvel. "They are as useless as old metal."

"You mean—?"

"When these knaves come to print their issue, they will find that, finely but plainly engraven across front and back plate, is one warning word."

"You mean?"

"'Counterfeit.'"

An Educational Garden.

The educational garden of Dr. J. B. Hurry, a horticulturist of Reading, England, is a novelty as a private enterprise. Useful plants of various kinds are grouped in several special plots. Among plants employed in medicine are eucalyptus, belladonna, aconite, stramonium, gentian, liquorice, podophyllin, asafetida, valerian, henbane, castor oil, cinchona, and opium poppy; foods include such plants as maize, millet, sugar, rice, bananas, arrowroot, ginger, pepper, chicory, olive, and carnamon; plants supplying clothing and textile materials embrace flax, hemp, cotton, jute, ramie, and nettle; and there are such plants yielding dyes as woad, indigo, madder, dyers weed, turmeric, annatto, and alkanet. Conservatories display tea, coffee, soya beans, monkey-nuts, guava, chick pea, cinnamon, and camphor. In the garden is also a museum, and in this numerous industrial products are shown, with labels referring to the plants from which they are derived. On certain days the public, including the older school children, is given free admission to the garden.

STOP THE PALTERING.

It is conceivable that a dispatch in the Paris Temps, originating in Geneva, will excite popular and official impatience in Entente Ally lands. It is represented that the Pontiff, "in transmitting to the Entente Allies the replies received from the Central Powers to his peace proposals, will set forth in an accompanying note the theory that Germany and Austria have accepted a basis of negotiations satisfactory to the Allies and will ask them to state their conditions." Why should they not bestated? It is true they are well known. No harm can be done by repeating them. Stripped down to the concrete, they may be stated in two words that cannot be improved upon or made more comprehensive or comprehensible. They are:

Unconditional surrender!

Why not formally state them to the Pope and put an end to paltering that serves no good purpose but which does distract the public mind from the great business of winning the war?

PAYING GERMANY IN KIND.

The French air raid on Stuttgart should take some of the conceit out of the Germans and make them think. Whatever military advantage may have been achieved by the bombing of the Wurttemburg city, the chief gain undoubtedly will be in the impression made on the minds of the Kaiser's people. And it is possible the reaction at headquarters may be momentous. The Germans have been assured the many air raids on England have been productive of military benefit. No doubt each succeeding report of a foray over the Eastern coast of John Bull's island has been popularly hailed as a long step toward the conquest of the British. What will the German people think of them in the light of Wurttemburg? When they compute the actual damage and appraise the advantage to their enemies will they not conclude assaults from the air are useless as war efforts? Further, must not the exploits of their own airmen appear puny in comparison with those of the French? And that will not make for approval of the continuance of attacks upon non-combatants. Such raids must appear to the German populace as they have appeared to the people of other countries. Their purpose is to terrorize, their effects are wanton killing of innocents, and their military advantages are nil. If they could be otherwise Germany should have profited greatly from them ere now. It has gained nothing. It is a short journey as the crow flies from its bases to the English towns and cities that have been attacked. The German task has been small beside that of the French airmen who flew 132 miles within the German lines to Stuttgart. Considered as an exploit in flying, the Frenchmen "put it all over" the Germans.

Frankly, the French raid was an act of reprisal. It was giving the Germans the same that they meted out to the French at Bar le Duc. It was in responce to the growing chorus of demand that terrorism be met with terrorism. The British public is becoming less and less patient with the London government's determination to "fight fair." Likely enough it will overwhelm the authorites and the Germans will pay a terrible price for their atrocities. But that will not alter the fact that bombing open cities is not effective warfare. The one possible benefit to be derived from such reprisals is that the German people may prevail upon their war lords to abandon air raids in England and France in protection of their own towns.

AMONG THE SOLDIERS

County Agent, Now Private Middleton, Writes from Camp Meade

Camp Meade, Md.
Oct. 1, 1917.

Dear Mr. Sincell,

I suppose you would like to know something of how we are getting along down here among the sands to make a long story short.

We arrived here in the best of condition Friday evening about 5.15. The receiving Lieutenant told me that it was the cleanest bunch that had come into the camp.

Every man was sober. We fell in column of four and marched to section F building 27 where we can easily be found if any one wishes to see us. Upon arriving at "27" we were given two blankets and a mess kit, assigned to our bunks. Milton has 37 and I have 38. We are all in one room on the second floor. On our march up from the station some fellow on the side spotted John Livengood and shouted "Oh! look at the big guy. They'll get him."

We are all getting along nicely. So far as we know now not a man will be sent back. The physicial examinations at this end are not much different from the one there. Some of the local boards have been very lax. One bunch has a man who is blind in one eye. Another has a man with a cork leg.

One of our greatest inconveniences is that of getting our meals. Our kitchen was not ready when we came. In fact quite a few were not ready. They were feeding about 600 men at the mess we have been going to. We have to form in line and wait our turn. An amusing incident in this connection is that Byrne Hamill was always (excepting once) about the first to get his eats. It goes rather hard with a bunch of fellows who have been used to sitting down to a full table of good hot grub to have to wait in line and then take what we get. I believe that we are getting enough. What we do get is as a rule well prepared, and we will soon be used to it.

We are all short on bed clothes. We are allowed to have pillows, but none are furnished. The only bed clothes we get are the two blankets. These are not enough to keep us warm, and it will be necessary for all to have more. Most of the fellows have already written home for what they want. We are not supplied with sweaters. Anyone knitting sweaters for any of the boys should use the olive drab color as we are not allowed to wear any other color where it can be seen.

I was interrupted in writing this by our Lieutenant who took Milton Sincell, Clay Stanton, Paul Liston and myself out for a little class in military tactics. We are making a try for non-com. officers. A company when filled is to have 250 men. That makes a good sized company.

We do not have our uniforms yet but expect to get them before long. They will be very welcome to some who brought no more civilian clothing than necessary. There is to be a camp laundry where we can have our clothes laundered at a very reasonable charge.

We have all been examined, vaccinated and inoculated. Everyone seems to be enjoying the life and the longer we are here the better we like it. We would appreciate visits from our friends.

With regards,
A. G. MIDDLETON.

More Money for Schools.

In a letter to county boards of education, M. Bates Stephens, State Superintendent of Schools, announces that the State Department of Education closed its fiscal year with a balance sufficient to enable him to waive his right to draw on the Comptroller for his next quarterly installment, and as a result $6,250.00 appropriated for the maintenance of the State Department of Education will go into the general school fund and be distributed to the elementary schools of the State.

presence of more than a thousand people, hardly a sound was made—the cheers choked those who attempted to give them and the boys left amid the waving of hats, umbrellas and handkerchiefs. They arrived at Camp Meade at 5 o'clock and were housed very comfortably after being given their suppers.

At the camp the boys were treated with the greatest consideration in comparison with that accorded some other divisions which arrived on the same train.

At Grantsville the residents of that town Tuesday night gave a banquet to her departing men at the National Hotel. The six selected men who were the guests of honor upon the occasion were Bruce Miller, W. Clay Stanton, Jonas Durst, Frank Younkin, John Livengood and E. M. Baker.

Mayor H. C. Bonig presided at the banquet, which consisted of a chicken and waffle supper followed by a smoker. The principal address was made by Dr. J. A. Carney, followed by response from Dr. R. C. Bowen, Henry Leatherman and M. P. Stanton, of Grantsville, and C. J. Warnick, of Washington, D. C. John Livengood spoke in behalf of the drafted men. The men were presented with a quantity of cigars and cigaretts donated by the people of Grantsville. Bender's orchestra furnished the music.

Those present were; Dr. T. O. Broadwater, Dr. J. A. Carney, Dr. R. C. Bowen, M. P. Stanton, J. C. Miller, Wm. Shaffer, John Zehner, James Shaffer, H. A. Shaffer, L. B. Shaffer, Louis Miller, Mark Bender, Byron Bender, C. L. Blocher, Stewart Rodamer, J. M. Custer, Henry Leathan, Frank Stanton, E. J. Younkin, J. A. Younkin, Thos. Younkin, Richard Younkin, Charles Younkin, Eugene Younkin, Edgar Roberts, Forest Beachy, L. G. Bittinger, H. H. Baker, J. O. Getty, Fred Livengood, J. R. Gnagey, C. J. Warnick, Carl Zellers, D. G. Duncan, Wm. Winterberg, T. D. Wyman, C. H. Dill, H. C. Bonig, W. E. Stanton, C. A. Bender.

At the Maryland Theatre Tuesday night where a farewell reception was given the boys who left Oakland yesterday morning on train No. 2 for Camp Meade, practically the same scenes occurred as those that took place at the Empire on last Thursday night.

The reception was under the auspices of the Red Cross Society. Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill again presided and made a ringing speech. Mr. F. E. Rathbun followed Mr. Hamill and presented the comfort kits to the men. Due to the non-arrival of the testaments from the publishers the boys went without them but they will be delivered in a few days by one of the army officers at Camp Meade.

Rev. W. M. Shultz made the closing address and warmed up to his subject with the vigor of one who knows his cause is just. At the close of Mr. Shultz's address he offered prayer and dismissed the men with the benediction.

During the evening many patriotic airs were played by the Keyser band who tendered their services for the occasion.

The parting at the station yesterday between the men and their friends was very affecting. Capt. Townshend had charge of the men until they were entained when they went under charge of Mr. Preston DeBerry, one of the selected men.

Those who went yesterday were:
Clarence Orville Baker, Finzel

THE FAIR IN FULL SWING

Record-Breaking Crowds In Attendance Yesterday and Today.

The annual fair in Oakland is in full swing. Yesterday a record-breaking crowd was in attendance and today if weather conditions remain favorable it is possible that yesterday's attendance will be eclipsed.

The exhibits are quite numerous, especially those in the live stock department. Grains and other farm products hold the centre of attraction for many.

The numerous free exhibitions as well as the great Arena Shows draw hundreds to see them. The balloon ascensions both on Tuesday and yesterday were made under favorable conditions. The feat will be duplicated today and again tomorrow.

Birthday Party.

A birthday surprise party was given Mr. John A. Sowers Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hardesty which proved before the day was ended to be a real family reunion, as all members of the family were present, as well as quite a few friends, numbering 27 in all. Dinner was served at one o'clock. A cake, decorated with seventy-five candles and which covered a good sized stand, reminded Mr. Sowers of the fact that he has entered the high mark of life. Fifty-two years ago he left Oakland to take part on the battle field and served his country for some three or four years, so he can really sympathize with those who are going now.

The affair was a complete surprise to Mr. Sowers as he did not know any of his family were even thinking of visiting Oakland on that day. Mr. Sowers was the recipient of many remembrances.

Brakeman Fatally Hurt.

At Bond, this county, which is located on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad midway of the Seventeen-Mile Grade, Samuel R. Ball, of Keyser, West Va., a brakeman on an eastbound freight train, fell from the top of a car to the tracks below and the train passing over him on Tuesday severed both legs. His death followed a short time after he arrived at the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser to which point he was taken by the crew of his train. He is survived by his widow and two children.

Mr. Farmer, Listen!

During the Fair we will sell you Farm Machinery (such as we have a good stock of) for less than the market price today.

We have the assurance that machinery of all kinds will be very much higher in price for 1918 than present prices, owing to the high price of steel and labor.

Machinery as yet has not advanced in proportion to the price of steel that enters into the making of same.

We have a good stock of Mowers, Rakes, Tedders, Grain Drills, Manure Spreaders, (wide spread) a few Olive Plows and a nice stock of Wagons on hand.

We will give next year's terms on Harvesting Machinery. We think we are safe in saying that Binders will be $200, Mowers $75 or $80, Rakes $40, and all other machinery in proportion for 1918.

Whether you buy of us or not our advice is to get your machinery for next year now.

CONGRESS TO ADJOURN FRIDAY

Only Two Important Measures Awaiting Final Action.

Oct 3.—Congress will end its extraordinary war session, which began April 2, Saturday, or possibly Friday.

Agreement of the Senate today to take a final vote late tomorrow on the soldiers' and sailors' insurance bill and the adoption, with record-breaking speed, of the conference report on the war deficiency appropriation bill, paved the way for adjournment until the regular December session.

Arrangements for the final formalities were made by Senator Martin and Representative Kitchin, majority leaders. Representatitve Kitchin prepared to introduced in the House tomorrow a resolution proposing adjournment at 5 o'clock Saturday. Such speed was made on legislation in the Senate late in the day, however, that Senator Martin said tonight it might be possible to finish Friday, instead.

The military insurance and deficiency appropriation measures are the only important bills awaiting final action which will get through this session. Leaders are determined to pass over all other legislation until December, including the soldiers' and sailors civil rights bill, which the House took up today and probably will pass tomorrow.

But brief time is expected to be required for conferees' agreement on the insurance measure after the final vote in the Senate tomorrow, and prompt approval in the House of she deficiency appropriation final draft also is scheduled.

Before adjourning both houses will send a committee to wait upon President Wilson to inquire formally if the Executive wishes any other matters disposed of, but so many members of both bodies have already left the city and the demand for immediate adjournment is so insistent that the program for a get-away not later than Saturday is regarded as certain to be carried out.

FUN AT MOUNT ST. AGNES'

Initiation of Seven Freshmen Enjoyed By Seniors Especially.

The initiation of the freshmen into the college at Mount St Agnes, Mount Washinton, took place yesterday in the spacious recreation hall of the school. The seven young ladies who, at the command of their seniors, were dressed as young children, with hair, decorated by bows, down their backs, trooped into the play room where the entire high and elementary schools were assembled. Cheers broke the silence as each task proposed was preformed with a smiling face and "sweet, childlike" simplicity.

For the general entertainment afforded by the freshies in their various songs and stunts the president of the student body gravely presented each young aspirant her college cap to replace the dunce cap she had been wearing. The always popular treat of ice-cream wound up the afternoon's pleasure, so now these seven young ladies feel as if they are full-fledged college girls. The freshmen who afforded the school so much amusement were:

"Potter's field," the graveyard in which are buried those who are interred at public expense, comes by its name legitimately. When Children Are Cross, Be Kind.

Don't be cross with children when they are cross. If they are irritable and pouty leave them alone to their blues by trying to divert their attention to some interesting book or game or toy. Get them outdoors to play or to walk. Take them for a ride. The common retort to cross children is in being cross yourself, but this only hurts the children and makes them moody and later despondent.

EARTH ROADS WORK

Necessary Tools and Machinery Needed for Building.

USE OF ELEVATING GRADERS

Machine May Be Operated Successfully With 25-Horsepower Tractor or Twelve Well-Trained Horses —Scrapers and Wagons.

(Prepared Specially by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

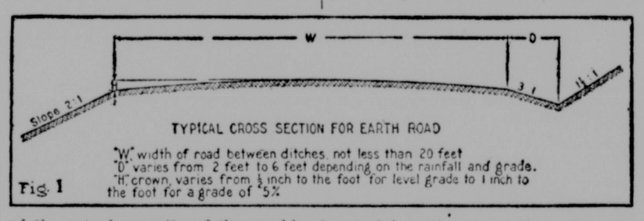
The use of elevating graders is sometimes desirable in the construction of earth roads. The essential features of this machine are a plow with a heavy moldboard, an elevating belt, a suitable frame for supporting the plow and belt, and driving and adjusting mechanisms for operating the belt and controlling the work. The plow loosens the material and throws it onto the belt, which conveys and deposits it either in the roadbed or wagons.

Elevating graders are adapted especially to building up embankments with material excavated from shallow borrow ditches along each side of the road. They also may be used to advantage in excavating long, shallow, through cuts and loading the material thus excavated into wagons for use in building up embankments at other points. The latter use, however, is restricted to situations where there is sufficient space to operate the grader and at the same time afford passageway for the teams and wagons to follow under the end of the belt to receive the successive loads as the grader is drawn forward.

Operating Elevating Grader.

It is customary to employ a traction engine for operating the elevating grader, though teams are used sometimes. Ordinarily, the machine may be operated successfully either with a 25-horse power tractor or with 12 well-trained horses.

The rate at which earth can be excavated with an elevating grader is relatively very high when conditions are favorable and the grader can be kept moving. But there are a number of rather complicated parts about such a machine which sometimes get out of order, and the work also is usually hampered by many unforeseen contingencies, such as "bogging" of the wheels, choking of the plow or the elevator belt, occurrence of buried stumps or stones in the excavation, etc. For these reasons the actual capacity of elevating graders, considered over a long period, seldom is more than about one-third or one-half the rated capacity, and where the material is loaded into wagons as it is excavated the actual capacity of the machine may be reduced still further. Elevating graders of the size used ordinarily in road work have a rated capacity of about 100 cubic yards per hour.



TYPICAL CROSS SECTION FOR EARTH ROAD

"W," width of road between ditches, not less than 20 feet
"D," varies from 2 feet to 6 feet depending on the rainfall and grade.
"H," crown, varies from ½ inch to the foot for level grade to 1 inch to the foot for a grade of 5%

Use of Scrapers, Wagons, Etc.

To grade a road of any considerable length, no matter where it is located, usually will require a considerable amount of work with devices other than the grading machine and elevating grader. The latter machine, as previously explained, may be very economical for special conditions to which they are adapted. But these special conditions seldom prevail for more than comparatively short stretches of road without sections intervening which require that a relatively large volume of material be moved from excavation to embankment within a distance of only a few hundred feet. Figure 1 shows a typical cross section for an earth road, where the grading machine hardly could be used advantageously except for finishing the road surface. To accomplish work of this kind economically, the devices for loosening, loading and hauling the material must all be adapted to turning around quickly in a small space and, not infrequently, must be such as to be handled readily over very rough ground. Such implements as wagons, wheeled scrapers, drag scrapers and plows therefore should form a part of the equipment on practically all road-grading projects.

The choice of proper implements to employ in moving material from excavation to embankment depends, first, on the nature and quantity of the material to be moved, and, second, on the length of haul. In general, where the material consists of earth it is loosened with plows and the economical method of hauling is fixed by the haul length about as follows:

For lengths of haul not exceeding 150 feet, drag scrapers; for lengths of haul between 150 feet and 600 feet, wheeled scrapers; for lengths of haul above 600 feet, wagons. Where the material consists of solid rock it must be loosened by drilling and blasting and practically always is hauled in wagons or carts, regardless of the haul length.

Types of Plows Used.

Two types of plows commonly are used in road grading. One is the type generally used for loosening ordinary soils, while the other is used for breaking up hardpan, lode road surfaces and other earth unusually difficult to loosen. Either type is drawn by four horses, or in some cases by a traction engine, and is operated by three men, including the driver. Such plows average about 150 pounds in weight and sell at an average price of from $12 to $18, but heavier plows of this type range in cost up to about $30. With average soil conditions they may be made to turn a furrow about 7 or 8 inches deep and from 8 to 10 inches wide. The hardpan plows vary considerably in weight and selling price but cost more than the turn plows. One reason for the higher cost is that the points must be made of a very high grade of steel in order to be durable.

Drag scrapers are made in 1-horse, 1½-horse and 2-horse sizes, which have respective rated capacities of 3, 5 and 7 cubic feet. Drag scrapers have an average weight, when empty, of from 75 to 100 pounds, and an actual capacity of about three-fourths the rated capacity. The price, f. o. b. factory, averages from $4 to $6 per scraper.

In operating drag scrapers the drivers also may load and empty the scraper, but frequently it is economical to provide additional laborers for this purpose. With a haul length of 100 feet and the teams moving steadily, one laborer should be able to load or empty and spread the material for about three scrapers. For scraper work to be effective the material to be excavated must be thoroughly loosened by the plows and should be free from large roots or stones. Where such obstructions occur time is saved by having them removed by hand during the process of plowing.

Force:
1 foreman.
4 to 6 scraper drivers.
2 laborers for loading scrapers.
2 laborers for dumping and spreading.
1 driver for plow.
1 laborer to hold plow.
1 laborer for trimming shoulders, etc.
4 to 6 two-horse teams for scrapers.
1 or 2 two-horse teams for plow.
Total, 1 foreman, 14 laborers, and 7 teams.

Tools:
6 drag scrapers (capacity 5 cubic feet).
1 road plow.
2 picks.
2 axes.
2 mattocks.
3 shovels.

The force employed should vary somewhat with the haul length, which is usually between 25 feet and 150 feet. Under average conditions an organization such as that described above should move from 300 to 350 cubic yards of earth per 10-hour day.

Objectionable Feature.

An objectionable feature of drag-scraper work is that the embankments tend to settle very irregularly. The reason is that the successive loads are not spread out uniformly as they are dumped, but are deposited as a succession of rather compact cores with the intervening spaces consisting of comparatively loose material. The loose material settles more than the compacted spots, and this unequal settlement produces pockets in the surface which hold water and gradually become deepened under the action of traffic.

Use Wheeled Scrapers.

Wheeled scrapers are used to a greater extent in road grading than either drag scrapers or wagons. The reason for this is that in road work the haul length falls, more frequently than otherwise, within the limits for which wheeled scrapers are economical. Several different sizes of such scrapers are in ordinary use, but the size employed most commonly has an actual load capacity of from 11 to 15 cubic feet, according to how heavily the load is heaped. Scrapers of this size ordinarily sell for from $35 to $50 f. o. b. factory.

In operating wheeled scrapers the material is loosened by plowing, in the manner already described, and is loaded by the scooping action of the scraper. Two horses usually are sufficient to draw the scraper after it is loaded, but a second team, called a snatch team, is hitched in at the front of the tongue to assist in loading. The snatch team should consist of either two or three horses, according to the character of the material, and one snatch team should serve several scrapers. The loading and dumping of the scrapers are done by laborers provided for that purpose and not by the drivers.

Force:
1 foreman.
6 to 11 drivers.
1 laborer for plowing.
2 laborers for loading scrapers.
2 laborers for dumping and spreading.
1 laborer to trim slopes, etc.
1 two-horse team for plow.
4 to 8 two-horse teams for scrapers.
1 or 2 two-horse snatch teams.
Total: 1 foreman, 17 laborers, 11 teams.

Tools:
8 wheeled scrapers (capacity 11 to 15 cubic feet).
1 road plow.
2 picks.
2 mattocks.
2 axes.
3 shovels.

The force employed should vary with the haul length, usually from 150 feet to 600 feet. Six to eight scrapers should be employed where the haul exceeds 250 feet. Where necessary one of the snatch teams may be used to assist the plow team.

Such an outfit should move from 200 to 250 cubic yards of earth per 10-hour day.

Evolution of the Wheel.

Naturally, there was a first man to eat an oyster, and there must have been some heroic pioneer to tackle every edible article that is known to civilization today. High authority has bestowed eulogy on the man who invented the wheel, and some have gone so far as to assert that this unidentified genius was the greatest benefactor of the race, but we may doubt if the wheel was really an invention. It seems more likely to have been a gradual discovery, the result of a slow, evolutionary process for which no man or group of men could claim the credit.—Exchange.

CHARGED TRACE UP TO PAT

Finnegan Probably Right When He Put Forward Thompson as Meanest of All Mean Men.

This one was told to Sam Bowers, the art salesman, by John Finnegan, train caller at the Union station, at Sioux City, Iowa.

"Talkin' about mean men," said Finnegan, "one time I knew a man by the name of Pat O'Toole, who worked for a farmer, a few miles out from here, by the name of Thompson.

"Well, one night O'Toole wint out to the barn an' he found the farmer hangin' by the neck from a beam by a buggy trace an' he cut him down an' run four miles for a doctor, an' the doctor come an' the farmer got well, an' he said he'd never do it again.

"Well, at the end of the month, after the farmer had paid O'Toole his wages, Pat discovered that he was $3 short, an' he wint back to the farmer, an' ses, ses he, 'How's this? Me money is short to the extent of $3?' An' the farmer ses, ses he, 'Why, that's the price of that fine new buggy trace of mine that you spoiled by cuttin' a couple of weeks back.'"

What He Feared.

During some building operations it was necessary for the workmen to walk across a single plank some distance from the ground.

When it came Pat's turn the foreman noticed that he went across on all fours. So he went up to Pat and asked contemptuously:

"What's the trouble, man? Are you afraid of walking on the plank?"

"No, sor," replied Pat. "It's afraid Oi am av walking off it!"

Shooting Pains.

Small Katherine had the "jumping toothache," although her mother was unaware of the nature of the pain. In her efforts to discover this she asked: "What does it feel like, honey?" "Oh," said Katherine, with a note of pain and despair, "it des feels like a dun a-shootin'."

It Pays Dividends.

Great books need hard, close repeated study, and are not to be skimmed over like current fiction. When the time which must in any case be expended on the mastery of the thought is subtracted, a modest knowledge of the language does not represent so very formidable an extra investment.

She Didn't Look Good.

"I want to get a good hoss for plowing," said Farmer Jones to a horse trader, "and I want a good one, too."

"I got just the hoss for you, friend, she's a good worker but she doesn't look good," returned the H. T.

"I ain't buyin' him for the looks, so if he's a good hoss I guess I'll take him."

Two days later Farmer Jones returned with the horse. "Why in the devil didn't you tell me the old boy was blind?" said Farmer Jones to the horse trader.

"Well, I think I made it plain enough when I said she didn't look good." So Farmer Jones has still got the old hoss.

Getting Old Too Fast?

Late in life the body shows signs of wear and often the kidneys weaken first. The back is lame, bent and achy, and the kidney action distressing. This makes people feel older than they are. Don't wait for dropsy, gravel, hardening of the arteries or Bright's disease. Use a mild kidney stimulant. Try Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands of elderly folks recommend them.

I could hardly take a deep breath without having sharp twinges across my kidneys. Hearing Doan's Kidney Pills praised so highly, I used some and they relieved the trouble. Whenever I have used them since, they have helped me."

The Safeguard

By PETER G. TISDALE

I was dining with my friend Edward J. Emerson and his wife when the news came that the Chinese people were vibrating between a monarchy and a republic. Emerson was a clergyman and had done ten years' missionary work among the Celestials. I asked him if in his opinion the Chinese were fitted for a free government.

"No people," he replied, "are fitted for a free government except those who have reached a high degree of intelligence. There are a few Chinese who are up to the standard of our western civilization, but there are millions of them who are sunk in the most abject superstition. When I first went to China I had a good deal to learn about the people there. I was soon initiated. Do you see that paper?

He pointed to a scrap of paper about 8 by 10 inches in size hanging on the wall. On it were written Chinese characters.

"That paper," he continued, "accounts for my being here at this moment. Without it I would not have been here. Soon after entering upon my work in China I fell in with a very intelligent mandarin who seemed to take a liking to me. I believed that if I could make a Christian of him he would influence others, and I set about the work of his conversion. He appeared to be very much interested in what I said to him, but I could not bring him to the point of declaring himself a Christian. I believed, however, that it was because by doing so he would bring down upon himself the anathemas of his people.

"One day he called a halt on our conversations. Something was in the wind, but I could not tell what it was. In bidding adieu to me he handed me that slip of paper you see hanging on the wall, telling me that if I got into trouble with his people to produce it and it would protect me from harm. Being new to the country, I did not understand what was written on it. I folded it and put it in my pocket.

"It was not long after this that the Chinese common people gave vent to their hatred of the foreign devils in one of those massacres which from time to time have occurred in that benighted land. One morning I was horrified by one of my converts telling me with fear and trembling that in a distant village the heathen had killed all the foreigners and hundreds of converts.

"That day all the converts at the station went away, I knew not where, but I perceived they were hiding from the wrath to come, for it was not likely that the massacre of which we had heard would be the last of the movement.

"Mrs. Emerson and I had been married only just previous to our departure from America, and none of our little ones had then come to us. The question was whether we should remain where we were or go elsewhere. We decided that we were as safe where we were as in any other location. Our station might not be attacked, while another to which we would flee might go down under the mob of infuriated fiends, so we concluded to remain.

"Every day, at last every hour, we heard of massacres nearer and nearer to us. But when the storm came it broke all at once. One morning I heard a distant din, and very soon a howling mob came down the street.

"The mind is a queer working bodily implement, and since what it did for me on that eventful morning I have felt sure that there is a lot about it that we don't understand. I had put the paper the mandarin had given me in a tin box where I kept other documents and had forgotten all about it. Suddenly as I heard those yells and shrieks it popped into my head. I remembered its donor had told me that if I got into trouble with his people to produce it.

"I went to the tin box that contained it, took it out and unfolded it. You see that it is large enough to be read from some distance. The point with me was how to enable the mob to see it and what it was before they murdered me. We were on the lower floor. My wife was as white as a sheet, and I confess I was no more self possessed. My hands trembled so that I could scarcely hold the paper. I ran to the window and placed it on a pane, the writing out toward the street.

"There I stood while the bloodcurdling yells came nearer and nearer. My wife, woman-like, ran to the door and locked it. No protection was thus afforded, for one kick would have broken it open.

"Presently I saw the scattered advance of the mob coming like white clouds shooting up in the sky before a hurricane. Then came a man bespattered with the blood of his fellowmen, and he made straight for the mission. I saw by the expression of his face that he knew it was the residence of the hated missionary. He was instantly joined by others, all making for the door. One turned the knob, but while doing so saw the paper I was holding against the window. He stopped short and pointed to the paper. All read it, paused and passed on. Others came and wondered why the station had not been destroyed till they saw the paper.

"I held it thus for half an hour, dreading lest some fiend should murder us before seeing it. When the last man had gone by I called to my wife to bring me some paste and fixed it on the pane."

"What was the writing on the paper?" I asked. He read it:

Respect this man and his family.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

What We Know, or Certainties in Religion.

A second thing we may affirm we know in our religious experience is found in 1 John 5:19.

"We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness." Mankind is divided into two great classes. They are for or against God. The Christian belongs to God, is for Him and of Him and to Him, the rest of the world, is in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity.

The Christian has passed from death unto life. He is saved. He can face death knowing that all will be well with him. He has passed from supposition into a state of knowledge, from uncertainty to assurance. He is satisfied with the hope within him, being assured that his Lord is able to keep that which he has committed unto Him against that day. On what does this knowledge rest? Our feelings? Assuredly not. This were a foundation of mere sand, shifting and changable as the wind. It would be a poor hope. It would be as uncertain as a weather vane.

Feelings change and vanish and with them would vanish our knowledge of salvation. Feelings are as evanescent as the fog of the morning. Knowledge is certain, but to make that which is absolutely certain depend on that which, of all things, is uncertain, is contrary to reason. No where in scripture do we find any such an idle thought.

This knowledge does not depend on a direct revelation from heaven. No such thing comes to the converted person to assure him he is saved. The spirit, it is true, beareth witness with our spirit, but that is to our sonship.

This knowledge rests on the word of God alone. We know it because God says so, and he makes this declaration in His word. Jesus says, "He that heareth my voice and believeth on Him that sent me hath everlasting life."

From this then we must conclude, that if we believe we have life, we know it for God says so. His word is the foundation. We sometimes look within us for direct proof of our being saved, but we are disappointed. We forget the word of the Lord is the best proof. It is the surest for it is absolute. Nothing can be more certain than the nature of the world in which we live. We know this to be true by experience. It is full of sin. It's character is evil. We must bear testimony that its work is evil. We must therefore refuse to it. We must bear witness against it, must preach the gospel to it, and urge men to accept it, and we will do this effectively by our example and daily life if we are Christians in fact as well as in name.

It is true, satisfying, comforting, while the Lord is of long suffering, kindness and tender mercy. We dare not be conformed to it for that would be treason to Him who has redeemed us.

We may know this great fact by history and the historical proof appeals to the ordinary man with much force. We may know it by observation and especially by experience, the testimony of experience cannot be gainsayed. It cannot be combatted. What a man knows, all the reasonings and sophistry of the human intellect cannot disprove.

Again we know that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord and are called according to his purpose. When Paul spake these words he was moved by the Spirit of God. Here is comfort for suffering saints. We know, not a matter of opinion but of consciousness. We know it from the nature of the covenant of grace which is ordered in all things and sure. We know it because of our relationship to God. We are His sons—His children and we know it from the experiences of his people. Witness Joseph, Moses, Job and David. "All things"—All of God's providences concur for the good of those that are Christs. Tis true that believers have afflictions and trials, but the intercession of the spirit is effectual and no matter how it goes with us all things work together for good. Even sufferings are for the benefit of Christians. Paul tells us that even grievous chastisements work the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Whatever powers and influences of the world may be brought to bear upon us, all the operations of the spirit, the temptations of satan and the persecution of men work for our good or cooperate with each other to this end.

There is unity in their operations as well as connection. As the machinery works in harmony of the various parts wheel within wheel and guided by the hand of the engineer, so all these things are controlled by the spirit of grace who works with and directs events to their final issue.

All these things work around a common center and that is Christ and His love. The machinery of providence is composed of many parts, yet every part has its place, by the appointment of God. Nothing is in vain and the whole plan is going on under the direction of the Divine Ruler.

All is "for good", real good, spiritual good. We may not see it to be for good, but the Lord does. It is for our eternal happiness. We are only spending our childhood here. In the next world we will enjoy our mature life. We arn in process of sanctification.

We are being trained here and as jewels are prepared for the crown of a king, so we now are being fitted for the coming of the Lord.

Israel prospered under oppression. So do believers now. Trouble is for the believers good, and directly or indirectly it accomplishes this. It separates us from sin. It brings us nearer Christ. It weans our affections from the world. No matter what comes, whether joy or sorrow, life or death, poverty or wealth, prosperity or adversity, success or failure, pain or pleasure, scorn or praise, all things work together for good. All the winds that blow waft the Christian nearer his home on high. Here let us rest for the present lest we consume too much space.

COLORED MEN FOR NAVY

Maryland Is Asked To Furnish Eight Weekly.

Maryland has been asked by the Navy Department to furnish eight colored mess attendants for the Navy each week until this branch of the service has been recruited to its full complement.

Lieutenant-Commander John Grady, Recruiting Inspector for the Eastern Naval Division, has urged Lieutenant M. A. Leahy, Recruiting Officer of Maryland, to do everything possible to bring these men into the service, as they are urgently needed.

These mess attendants are in addition to men for all the other branches of the naval service.

Here is afforded, say the Navy recruiting authorities, an opportunity for patriotic colored men, between the ages of 18 and 25 years to serve their country in time of war.

The necessary qualifications are a good, moral character, reasonable experience as a waiter, and, if possible, a recommendation as to character and proficiency as a waiter.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

Mrs. Olin Fortney and little son left for Kitzmiller on last Monday afternoon where they will remain until spring, when the family will locate at Shaw, where Mr. Fortney is employed as mine foreman for the Big Vein Coal Co.

Mr. James Darrow, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Darrow, of Meversdale, Pa., formerly a well known family of Beryl, enroute to Shaw, to accept a position with the Big Vein Coal Co., of that place, stopped off in town to spend the week-end with relatives at Borderside.

Mr. Edward Warnick's new Maxwell car, on its first visit to town, became unmanageable on the country road near his brother's store on last Saturday night, ran into the front porch of the store room, damaging the front part of the machine, completely demolishing the top and doing other damage to the extent of nearly two hundred dollars.

A K. of P. lodge was organized at this place last Saturday, Sept. 29th. The ceremonies were held in the Junior Order hall, commencing at 7:30 p. m.

Mr. William H. Gibson, superintendent of the Monroe Coal Mining Co., of Barnum, accompanied by his wife and little daughter, Miss Lucile Wolfe, of Piedmont, Miss Viola Durham, of Cumberland, and Messrs. Charles Kellegher and H. E. Kight, of Barnum, enjoyed a most delightful auto trip to Baltimore last week, leaving Barnum on last Friday afternoon in Mr. Kight's Hudson Super-Six, returning Sunday evening.

BITTINGER.

The first call for military service took from our community two very excellent young men in the persons of Messrs. Robert Glotfelty and Roy Hetrick. These two bright young men will be missed from our social circles and their taking away from their homes and parents was an occasion of sorrow and regret, but we know that they shall not be found wanting in true manliness and courage and we shall always think of them as brave boys doing their whole duty for their country, and shall have no fear that they will not return and live useful lives among us again.

Mr. and Mrs. Hachman, of Cove, Md., spent last Sunday with their daughter, Mrs. Clarence Hetrick, near this village.

A. J. Oester was supervising the trimming of trees along the National Pike near Grantsville last week.

Ex-Treasurer C. A. Beach, of near Grantsville, was the guest of B. H. Wiley at his home here last Sunday.

C. E. Ellithorp and family spent last Sunday out of town, visiting friends.

J. Messersmith, of Salisbury, Pa., spent last Sunday here as a guest of Miss Anna Wiley.

Mrs. Delphers and children, of Lonaconing, are visiting relatives in this community this week.

NORTH GLADE

General complaint is made about potatoes rotting. Farmers are very busy garnering what they have raised.

John T. O'Brien will have a barn raising next Monday.

C. S. Harvey will soon have his fine new barn completed.

Farmers are interested very much in the development of the lime industry near Swanton. Fellow tillers of the soil, let us get together and push this highly important matter.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Ferguson, of Fairmont, were visiting at G. W. Moon's recently.

Mrs. Ellen Murphy was buried on last Wednesday. Her funeral was preached by Rev. Wm. Barnard. A large number of people paid their last respect to this good woman.

Our picnic, held here recently, was quite a success, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather.

That our county ticket nominated by the Republicans from top to bottom is a good one is the opinion and expression of a great many.

Prices seem to be going up all the time except the teacher's salaries.

The war will doubtless continue until Kaiserism is defeated; but when, oh when will this be accomplished?

Scarcity of Teachers.

War not only affects employers of men, but the State Board of Education has found out that it seriously affects the school system of Maryland.

Dr. M. Bates Stephens, state superintendent of education, announced last Saturday that the public system of Maryland is over 100 teachers short, and in order to secure sufficient numbers of teachers to fill this gap, it has been found necessary to furnish to high school graduates provisional certificates which will enable them to teach for a period of one year.

The high wages and many avenues open to females, especially now, have caused this situation, and should the war continue for any length of time, it is likely the school system will feel the further effects of the loss of many teachers.—Baltimore American.

ALFALFA GROWING PROVES A SUCCESS

County Agents Urge a Well Prepared Seed Bed.

LIMING IS NECESSARY

The Soil Should Be Inoculated And Well Fertilized For the Best Results.

College Park, July 12.—In view of the many successful demonstrations in growing alfalfa conducted by Maryland farmers in co-operation with their county demonstration agents, there will be a considerable increase in the acreage seeded this year. That it is most important to give careful attention to details in seeding alfalfa has been repeatedly proven and in a circular issued by the Maryland Agricultural Extension Service, W. B. Kemp, specialist in farm crops, brings the attention of alfalfa growers to a number of important facts. Mr. Kemp says:

"Alfalfa requires much more complete drainage than do other farm crops. Land inclined to be wet and springy in winter and early spring, although dry enough during the growing season to produce good crops of corn, wheat, oats and grass, is not drained well enough for alfalfa. On such land alfalfa is sure to be killed out sooner or later by heaving due to the frequent freezing and thawing so common some seasons.

"Liming for alfalfa is absolutely necessary on practically all Maryland soils; even in the natural lime stone sections. It makes little or no difference what kind of lime is used if the proper amount of each is applied. It is a question of cost and ease of handling rather than the effect upon the alfalfa.

"The amount of lime to use under average conditions is one ton per acre of caustic lime; i. e., burnt stone or lump lime, ground lime or burnt oyster shells. Hydrated lime should be used at the rate of 2600 to 2700 pounds and ground lime stone or ground oyster shells should be applied at the rate of 3600 pounds to 2 tons per acre.

"The best time to apply lime is the season before sowing the alfalfa. If, however, this is not convenient or is impracticable, it may be applied just before, or even after seeding, with the assurance of good results and no injury."

TRANSFERRING BEES.

College Park, July 12.—Valuable suggestions are offered to Maryland beekeepers in a circular by G. C. Cale, of the Extension Service. Mr. Cale says in part:

"Transferring may be accomplished in several ways, but the following is suggested as the easiest:

A frame hive provided with one or two frames of worker comb or foundation is placed on the stand of the colony to be transferred, and the latter colony set to one side and turned upside down. A box large enough to invert over this colony is then secured and the bees are drummed up into it by constantly beating on the sides of the hive with sticks. When most of the bees have gathered in the box they may be shaken on a cloth placed in front of the new hive and started running in by gently smoking them. The queen must be with the bees if the colony is to establish itself.

"Now the combs of worker brood (not the drone brood), in the old box may be cut out, fitted and tied with raffia or string into empty frames and given to the bees in the new hive. Any remaining space should be filled with frames of drawn worker comb or full sheets of foundation. The remaining wax in the old hive may be melted up and the hive itself disposed of.

RURAL MINISTERS' CONFERENCE.

College Park, July 12.—The bulletin of the Maryland State College of Agriculture, announcing the Rural Ministers' Country Life Conference and School, July 30th to August 10th, prepared by Louis Ortmayer, Secretary, has just been issued. Mr. Ortmayer says: "The opportunity of the rural church is here. Never in the past has the country needed the steadying influence of a true Gospel as at the present time. Never before in the rural communities has the need of a moral dynamic, such as the virile religion alone can give, been so necessary. We are facing a tremendous task. Are we, the churches, thoroughly prepared for such a time? When Dwight L. Moody faced an extremely difficult task for the day he took extra time in the morning for mental and spiritual preparation. Is it not fitting and proper that we, the men of the country churches, take a few days this fall for a more thorough preparation in meeting the responsibilities that are ours?

"The Country Life School and Conference at Maryland State College offers such an opportunity. The dates for the School are July 30th to August 7th, inclusive. The dates for the Conference are August 8th, 9th and 10th. Ministers of all denominations are invited to attend one or both of these gatherings. The leadership will be the best the nation affords. The expense is nominal. For further particulars address, The Secretary, Country Life Conference, Maryland State College of Agriculture, College Park.

VICTROLA FUND REACHES MARK

Garrett County Boys at Camp Meade Will get Instrument.

Hardly had The Republican been mailed to its subscribers last Thursday before voluntary subscriptions toward the fund for the purchase of a Victrola for the Garrett county soldiers at Camp Meade begun to come in.

One gentleman, a minister whose name we shan't mention, handed over a greenback with the remark: "Never do you start anything for the boys again unless I am in on the ground floor. If this is insufficient for the purpose or if you want to raise another fund for anything else come to me." The spirit that will win the war is in that man.

A letter from Friendsville brought contributions from eleven of the citizens of that town Tuesday morning of this week. As soon as the mail could get it to this office another letter from a girls club at Gormania brought a check for $5.00, it being received Saturday morning. This was quick work. Others called at The Republican office and made contributions, the amount bringing the total well toward $100.

In Again—Out Again.

At the Empire Theatre Saturday night the greatest of America's movie male favorite in the person of Douglas Fairbanks will appear in "In Again—Out Again."

"In Again—Out Again" is the first Douglas Fairbanks offering following his affiliation with Artcraft Pictures. It presents a satire on New York and peaceful New Jersey and discloses incidents that are of the typical Fairbanks variety, offering on the whole a rapid-fire picture of red-blooded American theme and unusual surprise.

DR. ELY'S ADDRESS

Del vered at the Farewell Reception Tendered Soldiers

Complying with a number of requests fron various sources The Republican takes pleasure in publishing herewith the address delivered at the farewell reception tendered the selected men fron Garrett county in the Empire Thea re, Oakland, on Thursday evening, Sept mber 27th:

Dr Ely said, upon being introduced Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, chairman of the Garrett County Defense Committee:

"The darkest war cloud of history is hang g over us, but our oung men are r lying to the flag which is the emb m of liberty.

"We dare not challenge the devotion o our boys to their country and duty, and we are here to night to bid them Gods eed on their missio of right and justi , and valor and to pledge them our profound gratitude—a grati ude hat will reconsecrate the true Amerian spirit. We will cheri h their memries hile life lasts Our cause is just, w fight for freedom in its truest ense

"W have only good will for ermany masses, though we have no ymp hy with her aristocracy that ould oppress and subjugate the world. we do not war for conquest, but to reven it; not to annex but to protect. ur national s freedom requires his sor o arms.

Our country (her we pray,
Our voices silent never;
For the we'll fight, one new ate ery,
The stars and stripes f rever.

"We would not su mit to red ha ded rann anymo e than our fore ers's d d to taxation without represe tation. L ng continued wrongs we e ruthlessly inflicted upon s and gr ss injustice b the Imper l government against r e rights, commerce and citizens of the United States. Self respect and regard for the rights of humanity could not beat these wrongs any longer. We war the against tyranny, against the high handed militarism which would subdue the masses and bring them into a world power under a supreme dictator. Truly we are in perilous times, times that demand the sternest kind of self. The souls of men are being tried. Across Europe roles the roar of guns. Peaceful villages burst into flames. Ships of death sail the midnight sky and rain the missiles of murder upon the innocent and defenceless. The world staggers and groans under the weight of awful calamities. Homes are destroyed and hearts are broken. France is bleeding at every pore and is fighting for her existence. She would have been swept off the map if Imperialism could have done it.

"We are helping a nation preserve its integrity and its life. In such a crisis ardent patriotism and outspoken loyalty to the U. S. must characterize our citizens. Every idea that America has cherished for 140 years is now threatened with destruction. Shall we go on our way as if modern civilization were not at stake when the very liberty which our fathers brought to these shores, for which they shed their blood, is challenged to a death struggle?

"Shall we fail to do our best to preserve our rights and liberties against brigandage on the high seas, against a diabolical officialism that dares to order our ships off the sea and would destroy our commerce? That would be to merit not only the repudiation of the country but the censure of the God of nations.

"We are in it from a sense of duty and duty is holier than rights. There must be willing self denial and unstinted service which is the test of noble citizenship. We are here tonight, to give this public expression of our interest in our brave boys who will soon wear the dress of soldiers. Some of them may prefer not to go. Why shouldn't they? Is that a mark of a shirker? Never. Duty however demands and they answer the roll call cheerfully, say their good bye's and are off to serve their country.

"It is not saying anything detrimental to the patriotism of parents to say, we would prefer to keep them at home. Why shouldn't we? But our country calls and though it rends the heart strings and severs the tenderest cords of nature, yet we say, go, dear boys, "God be with you 'till we meet again." Abraham heard the call to sacrifice Isaac and he went to the appointed place. That was the trial of his life, and he met it like a true man, loyal to supreme authority, and although at the crucial moment, when the knife was raised to slay his beloved, the command came to loose him, virtually and to all intents and purposes. He had sacrificed his son, who was dearer to him than life. He did it out of a sense of duty and he was honored of God in so doing. And the boy! he might have objected, but he was a dutiful son, and in reality, in heavens sight, he was offered upon the altar. Our boys who have gone, and are now going forth, not knowing where, or what they may meet are not deterred from duty and though they may soon—as we hope and pray they will be restored again to home and peace, yet have they met the supreme test and by this act of devotion on their part, they have laid themselves on the altar of their country. The sacrifice is as real and sincere as if the life blood be on gory battle fields.

"They deserve the lasting honor and gratitude of the country for their intent and purpose was and is to endure all, to give up all for those principles that are dearer than life. There are some things that are dearer than life. What is life, without liberty! What is life that is at the mercy of a despot, that has to yield to his every beck! What is life if it has to be under the iron hand of seifish self seeking domineering and godless militarism. Life under such conditions would be a burden a misnomer, for we would be deprived of our divine right viz: life without liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Fame may await some of you, my boys, but honor is before all of you, and though there may be times when because of the music of musket balls, you may wish you were no thicker than a rye straw, still you will not hold your life dear, if you may but do your duty and serve your country. I believe too, that in this conflict you are serving God and humanity as well.

"A mighty movement is coming—it may be very near. Mankind cannot go on as it is doing now, divided, contentious, a rabble of conflicting nationalisms, and religions. Who shall deliver us from our barbarous sectionalisms, our feuds and cliques, our provincial groups and selfish aspirations, our greed and avarice. Not Abdul Baha, not the Kaiser nor our esteemed President, but the man of Galilee. This poor blinded world is demanding a leader a deliverer.

"The Bible is rejected, yet it alone can tell us the truth about the future. The world prefers to listen to fables, and ere long they will welcome a mighty leader—the man of sin—whose shadow even now falls across our times. The rule and authority of the man Christ Jesus, who alone can deliver and through whom peace and righteousness will come, is rejected.

"If we are free in the true sense of the word, we will never submit to allow 'Old Glory' to be trailed in the dust at the hands of despots. We must bear our share of the burden in this unholy war, but with God's help we can render the world the greatest service any nation has ever been permitted to give. We may confidently look forward to the future, when from this present struggle a new structure shall arise on a Christian foundation, so that the world will not know a repetition of this struggle for supremacy.

"Our duty is clear.

"(1) We must practice economy, consume every element of strength and cut out all extravagance.

"(2) We must support our Government at all cost. Down and out forever, with the perfidious traitors who are willing to enjoy and use as privileges the blessings of our land, to hide behind our government, yet at the same time plot its destruction by aiding the enemy. Cursed be the wrech who is guilty of treason who demands the sacrifice of our sons to further his diabolical schemes. The hottest hell is none to good for such traitors.

"(3) We must give our sons. We will; we are giving them. Here tonight are representatives of our gift, and with the scores already in the service, where will you find better, truer and more loyal boys, than are here, some are already in camp, some may be on the sea, some in the trenches and some of our nation's boys have already tasted death for duty to their country.

"We pledge them our unswerving fidelity; our abiding interest and our earnest prayers. We will not cease to pray that God will speedily crown the right with victory, so that you may be restored to your homes and peaceful pursuits. But if your lot is to go into the trenches or face the foe in mortal combat, we will pray the God of nations to shield you in the day of battle and give you the courage to do well your part, and give you such a supreme loyalty to Christ that you will gladly enlist under his banner so that with Him you may come forth from the open door of heaven to win the last and greatest battle of the age—the battle that will forever crush the foe and secure the right of our King to his Kingdom. Dear Boys! remember that the Red Cross is pledged for your help and comfort, every facility of home and country is behind you, therefore, we commit you to the Lord, who will care for you, if you trust him. We wish you health and success with all the sweetness and satisfaction of the consciousness of duty well done; we entreat for you the victor's crown, and a good place in the armies of heaven.

"So let it be in God's own might,
We gird us for the coming fight,
And strong in Him, whose cause is ours.

"In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapon he has given,
The light and love and truth of heaven."

"God save our noble men
Send them safe home again,
God save our men!
Keep them victorious,
Patient and chivalerous.
They are so dear to us,
God save our men."

SHALL HYPOCRISY AND DOUBLE DEALING WIN IN MARYLAND?

PROMOTERS OF ANNEXATION BY FORCE ARE TRUE TO NEITHER PARTY

Having caused the Republican convention to reverse itself upon the Annexation plank in its platform of two years ago, which pl k declared in favor of annexation with a referendum to the people affected, in accordance with t Constitution of the State, and is said to have been approved, if not prepared, by Chief Judge of he Supreme Bench of Baltimore City Morris A. Soper, then holding that office by appointment Governor Goldsborough and a candidate for re-election for the full term, they are now supportin Mayor Preston's Democratic nominees in the city, after having made the city candidates sign a repu ation of their party's platform.

THIS IS APPARENTLY IN PURSUANCE OF A PLAN OF CONQUEST, WHICH WILL GIVE THE POLITICAL RULERS OF THE CITY CONTROL OF THE STATE

By grasping one-half the popula on and taxable basis of Baltimore County and the richest and most populous part of Anne Arundel County through the Preston-Field Force Bill without a referendum, and then securing control of the Police and Liquor License Boards and passing a constitutional amendment giving the city proport nal representation in the Legislature they can reduce the remainder of the State to the conditi n of a dependent province.

FROM 70,000 TO 100,000 PEOPLE IN THE TERRITORY PROPOSED TO BE ANNEXED ARE MADE THE PAWNS IN THIS POLITICAL GAME.

The Democratic Party has decla d in favor of annexation by a bill that would be fair alike to the city, the territory to be annexed a d the remainder of the counties affected, on condition that the same be referred to the voters in the rritory proposed to be annexed, in accordance with the provision of the Constitution of this Sta . This provision was written into the Constitution by the Republicans themselves, in 1864, and w s recognized by them as necessary so lately as their convention of 1915, when they declared that a referendum was required for any annexation.

MAYOR PRESTON, FOLLOWING HIS "RULE OR RUIN" POLICY, IS MAKING A CATSPAW OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY TO DEFEAT THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES FOR THE LEGISLATURE AND THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR COMPTROLLER, SO THAT THE CITY OF BALTIMORE WILL BE ABLE TO ASK AND RECEIVE SUCH REPRESENTATION IN THE STATE CONVENTIONS OF BOTH PARTIES AND IN THE LEGISLATURE AS WILL ENABLE IT TO DOMINATE THE GOVERNMENT OF THE ENTIRE STATE. DO EITHER THE DEMOCRATS OR THE THINKING REPUBLICANS OF MARYLAND, WHETHER OF THE CITY OR THE COUNTIES, WANT THIS, IN THE LIGHT OF PAST HISTORY?

There are so many families having loved ones at rest in this beautiful God's acre who have not the time, or live too far away to attend to their lots regularly as they would like to do, and the male members of these families coming to vote can, for a nominal sum obtain a good meal and be helping in this worthy cause. Anyone wishing to donate something to eat, will kindly notify Miss Gertrude Hone, chairman of the committee.

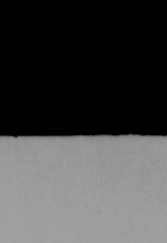
WOMAN SICK TWO YEARS

Could Do No Work. Now Strong as a Man.



Chicago, Ill.—"For about two years I suffered from a female trouble so I was unable to walk or do any of my own work. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and determined to try it. It brought almost immediate relief. My weakness has entirely disappeared and I never had better health. I weigh 165 pounds and am as strong as a man. I think money is well spent which purchases Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Jos. O'BRYAN, 1755 Newport Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

BIG QUESTIONS WAR RAISES

Tremendous Variety of Problems Must Be Solved by Those Directing the World Conflict.

Somewhere in the Australian hinterland railway trackage is being pulled up in order to be laid down again in the desert of Sinai or along the Tigris or in Albania or near the White sea or in the sector of Arras, says a thoughtful writer in a New York journal.

Given a shipload of iron ore, it is for someone to decide whether that iron is to be shell, or barbed wire, or steel helmet, or airplane engine, or anti-submarine net, or boat anchor, or traveling crane, or farm tractor for the raising potatoes to feed the crew of the ship that brings Chinese coolies from Canton to Marseilles to handle other masses of iron ore at the Creusot armament factories.

And when you multiply the task by the number of departments, war, admiralty, agriculture and subsistence, when the problem develops into one of determining whether a man can be best used for throwing hand grenades of Bullecourt or plowing in Sussex or unloading wheat at Liverpool or manufacturing boots for the Russian armies in Roumania, it becomes plain how inadequate is the ordinary pencil stub and newspaper margin for winning the war out of hand.

Hard Luck.

One day after shoveling soil on his father's allotment for two hours little Jemmy began to cry. "What's the trouble, my little man?" asked a sympathetic bystander. "A bad tramp come along and stole the shovel from the boy in the next allotment." "Well, my lad, it's nice to be sympathetic," said the looker-on, "but you mustn't worry so over other people's affairs." "It ain't that," said Jemmy. "I'm cryin' because he didn't steal my shovel, too."

Men with long heads are capable of using them on short notice.

SAVED HER JEWELS

Former Russian Czarina Sent Gems to Germany.

Treasure Estimated to Be Worth $100,000,000 Kept Out of Hands of the Revolutionists.

The Russian royal jewels, including the gems that incrusted the imperial Romanoff crown, are safe from the democratic hands of the new rulers in Petrograd. With a woman's intuitive knowledge of trouble ahead, the former czarina had them tucked away in a safe deposit vault in her ancestral city of Darmstadt, Germany, right at the beginning of the war.

And there they will remain until Mr. and Mrs. Romanoff claim them again, says the New York Tribune.

The story of the Russian royal jewels is told in the Chronicle by a writer who says that the former czarina was largely responsible for the war, in that she assured her German friends and relatives that Russia would not be a formidable antagonist. She proceeded to prove this antebellum prediction by pro-German intrigue which ended with the revolution and the overthrow of the Romanoff dynasty.

But the former czarina, who, before her marriage was Princess Alexandra Alice of Hesse, had no illusions about Germany. Accordingly, she packed up the family jewels in the summer of 1914, when she saw the international war clouds appear, and sent them in charge of trusted messengers to her brother, the grand duke of Hesse, for safe keeping till peace was restored. The royal emissaries traveled by the way of Finland and Sweden. They reached their destination before the mobilization of the Russian army was complete.

The tale of the czarina's German forehandedness in the matter of saving the family gems is said to have been revealed by members of the Russian commission, who visited New York city recently.

A New York society woman had her eye peeled for bargains in royal jewelry and approached members of the commission on the subject of purchasing a string of rare pearls which she had seen the former czarina wear at a fashionable European resort some years ago. She was told that she would have to talk to Mrs. Romanoff or her brother, the grand duke of Hesse.

Ivan Narodny, Russian business man and writer of New York, corroborated the article in the Chronicle. Mr. Narodny said it was impossible to place an exact value on the royal jewels, but estimated that they ought to bring close to $100,000,000 in the market. He said they were of far greater intrinsic value than the historic jewels deposited in the Kremlin, which are safe.

The disappearance of the royal jewels became known about a month after the revolution, when the provisional government's appraisers were taking an inventory of the Hermitage, one of the structures of the winter palace, where the treasures were supposed to be kept, according to Mr. Narodny.

"When the vaults of the Hermitage were opened the jewel boxes were gone," said Mr. Narodny. "The imperial crown reposed on its silk cushion in one chamber of the vault, but all of its stones were found to be of paste."

Woman Captures Eagle.

Mrs. Winthrop Howland of the El Chivar Goat ranch in Live Oak Canyon came out victor in a battle with a golden eagle and the big bird is now a captive at the ranch, says a Redlands (Cal.) dispatch. Mrs. Howland noticed the bird alight in a peach tree. It appeared to be exhausted, so she grabbed one leg and then the battle started.

Mrs. Howland saw that she was in for a fight, and not daring to let loose of the bird, made a dive for its neck, and was lucky enough to get hold of it. She was thus able to keep the bird from biting her, but it beat at her with its wings. She managed to get it into a pigeon corral and then found that she was almost exhausted by the fight.

The eagle is a large one, and measures about six feet from tip to tip. When Mrs. Howland made an examination she found that she had been wounded, but not seriously.

Must Sleep.

It was nearly noon when the irate traveling man found the night clerk of the little hotel in a North Carolina town.

"I told you to call me for the two o'clock train. Now I have to lose twenty-four hours' time. Why didn't you call me?"

"I couldn't very well," explained the clerk cheerfully. "I just got up myself."—Everybody's Magazine.

Prospective Rivalry.

"Where's the tape line?"

"I don't remember exactly," responded mother. "What do you want with it?"

"I was just reading over the measurements of the Venus de Milo," explained the daughter with some embarrassment.

Ahead of Him.

Mr. Gotcoin—Now, Willie, when your sister comes down and is comfortably seated on the couch with me I want you to tiptoe in softly and turn the gas down low. Will you?

Willie—You're too late. Sister told me to come in and turn it out.—Stray Stories.

SOME RIFLE FIRING KINKS

There Are a Thousand Things Not Mentioned in "Drill Regulations" That Recruit Must Learn.

The average recruit who starts in at West Point knows as much about the fine points of rifle firing as a longshoreman about flying. First he masters the elementary steps—the manual of arms and the correct firing positions, says the Popular Science Monthly. Then he must learn a thousand facts not mentioned in the "drill regulations." Among the rifle kinks, for instance, is the smoking of the glass rifle sights for work in the sun. By simply holding the sights over the flame of a match—or, better, over an alcohol flame—a light layer of lampblack is spread over the sight which enables the soldier to fire even when he is directly facing the sun. And when his back is toward the sun, the reflected glare is eliminated so that he can work without danger to his eyes.

Another kink is the doubling up of the ordinary rifle strap in order to use it to obtain a sling-grip. By making the sling short enough, it is possible for the left hand to obtain a viselike grip on the rifle. This helps considerably in steadying it.

Decorating a Savage.

Florence Partello Stuart, in one of her delightful tales of the Moro charm boy, Piang, tells of an embarrassing situation. Piang had saved the governor's life at the risk of his own.

"'Piang, I am about to decorate you with the emblem of our government; these infantry cross-guns I shall pin on your breast'—the dignified governor reached forward to make good his words, but paused in embarrassment, the speech dying on his lips. He gazed in dismay at the scantily clothed little savage, standing straight and expectant before him.

"'I shall place this emblem,' again began the worthy official. There was a titter among the spectators.

"Piang, eagerly eyeing the treasure, wondered why the governor delayed. Suddenly a gleam of understanding broke over Piang, and he grinned broadly. With the tip of his finger he touched the shining cross-guns, then his necklace of crocodile teeth. The situation was saved."—St. Nicholas.

Fine Pumphouse.

Charles had lived his four years on a farm. He was on a visit to his city aunt and upon arrival asked for a drink. His mother took him into the bathroom and drew some water from a faucet. "My," exclaimed Charles, looking around the white enameled room, "Aunt Dell has a lovely pumphouse."

Hindu Ascetics Revived After Three Months Under Ground.

Rev. Dr. J. C. R. Ewing, missionary to India, who recently returned to the United States after 38 years in the country of the rajahs and mahatmas, was discussing the miraculous things reported of the Hindu ascetics and admitted that he has been obliged to tell of some things which he has seen, but does not understand. Doctor Ewing said:

"It is certainly true that the Hindu magicians perform some tricks which our best sleight-of-hand performers are unable to approach. I have seen some things without being able to account for them, but I am, nevertheless, certain that they are all tricks. One of the best of these was an exhibition with cards. The performer placed a deck of cards upright in a glass. Then, taking another deck, he exposed a card and calling "come, come" several times in his native language, the identical card which he was exhibiting rose out of the deck in the glass and stood where it could be seen by a large audience right on top of the deck, the performer at the same time exhibiting the card which he had selected. I believe that this was due to clever manipulation, though I suppose some persons would ascribe it to teiepathy.

"I have seen the trick of making a plant grow from a seed before the eyes, and this, too, I believe, is the result of manipulation. A curtain is placed around the vessel and then removed, and the plant shown expanding and growing.

"Somewhat more difficult to be skeptical about, however, are the performances of the Hindu ascetics, and some of these are possibly the results of religious fanaticism. I know of the case of a man who lay 14 years on a bed of spikes. That is, he was said to have lain there 14 years. Eventually, of course, he died of his sufferings. I saw the man myself, and there was no reason to doubt the tales of the length of time of his torture.

"I know also that the stories of men going into a cataleptic state and being buried are true. The tongue is pulled out as far as it can be pulled and then turned back into the victim's throat and he becomes unconscious, all animation being apparently suspended. He is buried, and after remaining in the ground for a period as long as three months in some cases, he is dug up and resuscitated.

"The theory upon which these tortures are endured is that our separate existence is a mistaken notion and that only by asceticism is it possible to overcome the mistake and realize unity with all things. The teaching which has been evolved by the Hindu ascetics is very beautiful and very attractive for a certain type of mind, but it is after all nothing but a form of atheism. The Christian religion is spreading rapidly in India, especially among the lower classes and we have great difficulty in taking care of the converts. Among the higher classes it is spreading, too, although formal assent to it is slow on account of the severity of the caste ostracism which follows conversion. The English government has the country well in hand and it would seem that the country is destined for a very rapid development both in Christianity and democracy.

Old Emperor Saw Clearly.

In 1875, when France was recovering from the war of 1870-71, the German government, or at least the military party, it was said, was proposing to crush her once more. When Delane became satisfied as to the accuracy of the report, he published, on May 6, the story. "The effect produced by the revelation of the German plot was instantaneous, universal and profound. Both the Russian emperor and Queen Victoria appealed to the German emperor to stay his hand. The German emperor denied the truth of the queen's allegations, and a sentence in his letter is worth recalling today in the reign of his grandson: 'No one is more thoroughly convinced than the writer that he who provokes a war in Europe will have the whole of public opinion against him, and will accordingly have no ally, no neutrale bienveillant, but, rather, adversaries.'"

No Use for It.

Pat walked into the post office. After getting into the telephone box he called a wrong number. As there was no such number the switch attendant did not answer him. Pat shouted again, but received no answer.

The lady of the post office opened the door and told him to shout a little louder, which he did, but still no answer.

Again she said he would require to speak louder.

Pat got angry at this and turning to the lady said:

"Begorra, if I could shout any louder I wouldn't use your bloomin' ould telephone at all!"—Tit-Bits.

Harmless Vanity.

"I noticed your neighbor had a rather condescending air when addressing you."

"Oh, I don't mind that," replied Mr. Jobsen. "I have to get downtown in the morning an hour earlier than he does and he has an idea that makes him my social superior."

Some Information.

"Sedentary work," said the lecturer on physical torture, "tends to lessen the endurance."

Just a Suggestion.

Little Mary was called in to see the new baby, who was the sixth in the family. All the previous children had been very small babies. Mary looked at the baby a short time, then said: "Mamma; don't you think it would be better to have them a little bigger and not so many of them?"

Code of Beauty.

Our code and schedule of beauty is, I often feel, a very formal affair. Either we are afraid or ashamed to differ from received opinions, or we have never thought of revising the code we adopted in our youth, or we do not really look at things, or we do not care about beauty at all.—A. C. Benson.

ANNUAL EXHIBIT A GREAT SUCCESS

The Best Fair Ever Held in Oakland Ended Friday.

For sometime past the newely organized Oakland Fair Association was quite busy making arrangements and plans for their first Fair, which was held Oct. 2, 3, 4 and 5. It was evident on Monday that the exhibits in all departments would exceed that of any former years, and those in charge were kept busy all day and until late in the evening, taking care of the many exhibitors from all parts of the county, also on Tuesday morning there were still a large number who brought in their products for exhibition and to compete for the liberal premiums offered by the Fair Association, and the business men of Oakland and the county.

The Fair building had been beautifully decorated with the national colors, farm products, and autumn leaves, especially the third floor of the building, which was in charge of the ladies. This was indeed an attractive place. Here the ladies of the Red Cross the Civic Club and Lutheran Church had booths, also the display of The H. Weber & Sons Co. added much to the beauty of the place.

Early Tuesday morning the crowd began to gather, and it was evident that there was going to be a record breaking attendance. This proved to be true on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday despite the threatening weather, which had a tendency to keep many away, but those who were present seemed to have come for the express purpose of enjoying themselves, which they surely did in every sense of the word.

Tuesday was designated as Get Acquainted and Automobile Day. The Automobile parade was the best ever held in Oakland, there being quite a number of beautifully decorated cars entered.

Owing to the fact that there was no entries in the Farmers parade, there was no parade on Wednesday. This was quite a disappointment to the many present, and it is to be hoped that another year will see this one of the leading attractions.

The stock parade was held on Thursday and showed off to an advantage what the farmers are doing to improve their stock, as was shown by the many prize winning animals in the parade.

On Friday the school children and teachers from various parts of the county were the guests of the Fair Association, they all being admitted free to the grounds, after the parade, which was an inspiring sight as they paraded the streets of the town, led by the Keyser Band, playing patriotic music. Owing to the fact that early in the morning it seemed evident that it was going to rain, many schools were not present.

Every afternoon Mr. "Jack" Huffstickler was the centre of attraction, in a balloon ascension and parachute leap, which with the exception of the first day was made under very difficult and trying circumstances.

The Arena Amusement Co. occupied the attention of the visitors outside the building, with varied attractions for old and young.

Too much praise cannot be given the Keyser Band, an aggregation of high-class musicians who were ready and willing at all times to add to the pleasure of those present with their inspiring music.

No better exhibits can be seen any where than were offered here. The management regret that in some of the departments there was not enough competition to award premium money. It is to be hoped that next year every class in each of the departments will be filled with the products of Garrett county, which without a doubt excel those of any other part of the state.

Plans are already being made for next year's fair, and it is the desire of the management, with the help and co-operation of the citizens of the county, that the fair of 1918 will far exceed the one which has just closed. Begin now to make arrangements to have an exhibit of some kind ready for next year.

The officers of the Association are: President, Henry M. Speicher; Vice President, Wade H. Hinebaugh; Secretary, Thos. A. Gonder; Treasurer, Henry Lauer. Directors: Dr. Geo. C. Melody, John Stevenson, Henry P. Miller, Chas. A. Ashby, Chas. R. Savedge, Thos. E Bishopp, U. O. Blocher, L. J. Brown, F. G Fox, Henry Smouse, W. McCulloh Brown.

Mr. Farmer, Listen!

During the Fair we will sell you Farm Machinery (such as we have a good stock of) for less than the market price today.

We have the assurance that machinery of all kinds will be very much higher in price for 1918 than present prices, owing to the high price of steel and labor.

Machinery as yet has not advanced in proportion to the price of steel that enters into the making of same.

We have a good stock of Mowers, Rakes, Tedders, Grain Drills, Manure Spreaders, (wide spread) a few Olive Plows and a nice stock of Wagons on hand.

We will give next year's terms on Harvesting Machinery. We think we are safe in saying that Binders will be $200, Mowers $75 or $80, Rakes $40, and all other machinery in proportion for 1918.

Whether you buy of us or not our advice is to get your machinery for next year now.

GETTING INTO THE WAYS OF ARMY

Garrett County Soldiers Are Yet Unattached to Regular Command

Private A. G. Middleton, in camp at Camp Meade with the soldiers who went from Oakland recently, has written the following interesting letter to the editor, which is printed below.

Private Middleton gives expression to his regret that the local soldiers will sooner or later be assigned to different commands and the comeradie which has grown up between them will be sundered.

The letter follows:

Camp Meade, Oct. 10, 1917.

DEAR MR. SINCELL:

The copies of The Republican arrived today and were enthusiastically received.

Our boys are gradually becoming accustomed to the new life and in most instances are enjoying it.

I am sorry to have to report one man down and out—Bruce Miller, Grantsville, is in the hospital with appendicitis. The last we heard he was doing nicely. Several of the fellows have been troubled with minor ailments, but as a whole we are in very good physical condition.

We are temporarily a part of Company G of the 313th. Infantry. We have moved since I last wrote you to Barracks G—28. Mail, in order to reach us promptly, should be addressed:

Co. G—313th Inf.,
Barracks G—28.

Orders have gone forth to have no perishable good sent to camp by parcels post. The enormous amount of mail coming in daily causes delays in the delivery of parcels and as a result the postoffice does not have a very sanitary odor. This resulted in the foregoing order.

To get back to the moving it was "take up thy bed and walk" in the real sense of the word. The First Sergeant suddenly put in his appearance and told us to pack everything on our beds and be ready to move, beds and all. Most of us teamed up and piled our things on one bed, placed the other cot on top and made it all in one trip. I wish I could have had a picture of the bunch going up the road, it made some picture.

We are in a peculiar position here. We are a part of the 3rd Training Battalion. By this they mean that we are not a permanent organization. In other words we are a source of supply for vacancies in already organized companies. This means that we will in all likelihood be separated eventually from one another. How we do wish we could have a company of Western Md. boys. It's hard to have to think that we will not be able to all stay together.

One of the newest things in camp is school for non commissioned officers. There are seven or eight Garrett county boys attending it.

We see quite a little of Lieut. Morris Sincell and Lieut. Earl Smith. Morris happens to have the boys from my former home, Steelton, Pa.

I was very glad to learn that the fair was such a grand success and very, very sorry that I was unable to attend it.

With best regards to every one, I am,
Very sincerely yours,
A. G. MIDDLETON.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Rev. Jones, the Baptist minister here for several years, will soon go to Baltimore with his family to serve a church in that city. They were very popular here.

Clyde Shipley came from Baltimore Saturday and returned Monday taking his grandmother with him. Clyde is working in a munition factory in that city.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington left yesterday for Washington City, where he hopes to lease a hotel for the winter.

Rev. L. A. Rudisill is making a transcript of the properties in the Park which will be used in making more equitable assessment of taxes in the future.

BITTINGER.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Brenneman are the proud parents of a son, born to them on Friday, October 5th.

Asa J. Orendorf recently purchased a Ford roadster and is now enjoying the delights of frequent "joy rides" with his wife.

Clark Brenneman is confined to his home by an attack of typhoid fever.

Many folks from this village and surrounding country were visitors at the Oakland Fair, last week, and many report having been pleased with the entertainment and management of the affair.

Messrs. Peter Opal and Edward Buckle motored to Hagerstown, Md., this week to attend the Fair in that city.

Simon Brenneman and his force of carpenters have begun the erection of a large barn on the Levi Resh farm, near here.

B. H. Wiley visited his sister, Miss Mary Wiley, at Piedmont, W. Va., a few days ago.

Our roads have been greatly improved under the management of Joseph Ash, but we regret that the work has been suspended, as the machinery has been taken elsewhere to do some much needed work on other roads.

Order Publication

William H. Swauger, et. al., vs. Sarah Golding et. al.

No. 2142 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is for the purpose of obtaining a decree for the sale of the real estate of Martha A. Swauger, late of Garrett county, deceased, and a distribution of the proceeds amongst the parties entitled to interest therein.

The bill states that Martha A. Swauger departed this life May 2nd, 1917, intestate, possessed of a farm of 110 acres, located in said Garrett county, and left surviving her a husband, William H. Swauger and the following children, viz: William F. Swauger, George E. Swauger, Elizabeth Kerns, Sarah Golding, Albert Swauger, Mary Williams, Charles Swauger, Joseph Swauger, Ella Beckman and Lewis Swauger, all of whom being of full age. The said George E., Sarah, Mary, Charles, Ella and Lewis, being non-residents of the State of Maryland, and the said William H. Swauger, William F., Elizabeth, Albert and Joseph being residents of Maryland.

The bill then states that the land is not susceptible of partition amongst the parties without loss and injury, and that it will be necessary to make sale of same in order to divide it.

The Bill then prays for a decree for sale of said property, and that the proceeds of same be divided and for general relief, and as so prays for an order of publication against non-residents defendants and for subpoena against the resident defendants.

It is thereupon, this 10th day of October, 1917, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 16th day of November, 1917, give notice to Sarah Golding and George Golding, her husband, Mary Williams and Madison Williams, her husband, Charles Swauger and Tillie Swauger, his wife, Ella Beckman and Edward Beckman, her husband, Lewis Swauger and Mabel Swauger, his wife, all of whom are non-residents of the State of Maryland, and all of whom are of full age, of the object and substance of this Bill, and warning them to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 3d day of December next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed; or in lieu of said order of publication, the plaintiffs are authorized to give notice to the said non-residents defendants by personal service of this order and return thereof as provided by the laws of the State of Maryland.

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

THE GIRL WHO VANISHED

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

WHEN Resilius Marvel, head of the United Bankers' Protective association, came into our institution that morning, I noted that he made the rounds of the officers' desks more like a man of leisure than a person summoned on an urgent and important case where his keenest professional skill would be required. As secretary to the president and as his own intimate friend and ardent admirer, I was first to greet him as he came past the railinged space. I led him into the private office.

"A single individual possesses only a limited scope," was his first remark; "he sees only as one mind. Several individuals with a multiplied scope see as several minds. Hence a flitting word or two along the line, my friend, and some details from you, which you always put intelligently."

"Thanks," I bowed, drawing towards me an envelope marked "Warner Clay."

"You see, all that," added Marvel, "may be resultant of a double check, for the mission of a bank and its aides is to see that an asset may not lose what it possesses, and that it may find its right place."

"Thirty thousand has found its wrong place just at present," I observed.

"So I understand. A forgery, I believe. Go on."

Resilius Marvel fixed his eye on me and then upon the envelope which I had opened, out of which I drew a strip of paper.

"This is check 953, dated May 28, drawn upon our bank and signed by Warner Clay," I stated. "It is made out in favor of Miss Geraldine Farrar. Warner Clay is a wealthy man, a widower, a client of our bank for some years. Miss Farrar is, I believe, a distant relative and a sort of ward of his. She has lived at his home, has acted as his amanuensis and stenographer, and when he has been ill has attended to many details of his business. She is known to the paying teller, A to G section, to whom she has presented checks as high in amount as $100,000. She has been the recognized accredited agent of Mr. Clay at all times. A week ago when she presented that check, it was cashed without the hesitation of a moment."

"June 2, as is customary," I went on, "that check and all other May checks were mailed to Warner Clay, with a statement of his account to date, as to all other clients of the institution. Yesterday Mr. Clay came to the bank in a condition of some excitement and pronounced the check a forgery."

Marvel arose rather summarily.

"Show me the signature book," he directed.

We went to the cage where the registers were kept. He had retained possession of the check. I waited while Marvel compared the signatures. I watched with interest as he employed his magnifying glass. I wondered as he felt gently with one forefinger, not only the front but also the reverse surface of check and signature page alike.

"What else?" I inquired, as we strolled back to the private office.

"A letter introducing me to Mr. Clay as the representative of the bank. I must investigate that end. Oh, trust me to make no complications by giving offense to a good customer of the bank. I suppose his announcement that the check was a forgery was accepted by the bank with the usual urbane complacency?"

"Of course. Our policy is to accept the word of a profitable client unequivocally, just as we correct a claimed shortage without a quibble. Mr. Clay was informed that 'the trifling irregularity' would be remedied according to our rule."

"That is, after the formality of directorate sanction, the $30,000 would be re-credited to his account?"

"Exactly."

"Very fine—that gives us thirty days."

"What for?" I asked in my blunt, stupid way—as I learned afterwards.

"Oh, a number of reasons," responded Marvel lightly, but under the surface I detected the merest shadow of a smile, and again I noted how he caressed the space given to the signature of the check, as if that portion of it held some especial fascination for his keen sense of touch. "In the first place, though—what does this Miss Farrar say?"

"Oh, that's the trouble," I blurted out—"Miss Geraldine Farrar is not to be found.

"Yes," I hurried on, trying to make amends for my negligence in not apprising him of this feature of the case at the start. "It was the distress of Mr. Clay when he appeared at the bank to announce the forgery that caused us to conceal any doubt as to the justice of his claim. He was appalled at the fact that a trusted and beloved relative could plan to rob him. He was cut to the heart, he said, to realize that the girl he had provided for through so many years, to whom he had given a home, had so ungratefully repudiated his almost fatherly love. On the morning of May 28 Miss Farrar cashed the $30,000 check. Mr. Clay has not seen her since, nor anyone else, so far as we have been able to discover. At the moment when the young lady passed out of this bank she passed into obscurity. Our floor detective has made some casual investigation. He has found no trace of the movements of Miss Farrar later than 11 a. m., May 28, no clew nor hint of a clew as to her present whereabouts. She has vanished completely."

"The letter I asked for," said Marvel briefly, in his mandatory, decisive way; and when I had prepared and delivered it he left the bank without another word, his thoughts enveloping him in a silent, baffling mood I knew his habits too well to intrude upon.

The loss of $30,000 was not much for an institution of our financial integrity, and so far as he was personally concerned our president would ordinarily have been content to charge it off to profit and loss account. However, when Resilius Marvel entered a case he was certain to bring to light "the goods," or at least some development that expressed lucidity and satisfaction.

The bank was just closing that afternoon when my friend reappeared. As he came into the private office the president was just putting on his gloves preparatory to taking his automobile for the club. He paused with his usual genial nod to Marvel, and stepped within the room and lingered for a moment.

"I presume it is a plain case, and the bank is $30,000 out?" he observed.

"Hardly," was the prompt response. "The case, however, calls for some attention possibly several thousand miles from here."

"Then there is a chance?" was suggested hopefully.

"I shall want the best man in the bank and my good friend," replied Marvel, placing his hand on my shoulder.

"That is foregone, since you say it," smiled our president. "It's the girl, I suppose—the forger?"

"It is the girl, yes," assented Marvel. "As to her being the forger—I doubt it."

"What's that!" demanded the president, with a start. You don't mean to say——"

"I mean to quote from the commercial agency patter: 'considerable conservation should be exercised in dealings with——'"

"Warner Clay?"

"Take it so."

"Is that a warning?"

"You might act on that basis until you hear again from me," said Marvel.

"You amaze me!"

The president departed, thoughtfully drawing on a glove, an awakened distrust in his bearing that indicated a shock.

"Now, then, you and I will thrash this thing out," he began. "First, though, make your arrangements to bear me company."

"How far?" I inquired, sorting over my short and long distance traveling satchels in my mind.

"Galveston—first. You will have time for preparations. The train leaves at 8. I only want half an hour just now. That is Miss Farrar." He said, and drew a card photo from his pocket.

"The young lady—" I ventured.

"Is at Galveston, or thereabouts. I saw your esteemed bank client, this Mr. Warner Clay. I found him as I had pictured him: an elfish, miserly being with no thought outside of his money and getting more. The man is a financial pervert and sly and shrewd as a fox. He positively welcomed me. Then he lied to me and I had him. I left him so well satisfied that his word was gold with the bank, and that my brief visit was a cursory and superficial bit of routine, that he will gloat over his fancied success for a week to come. When I stated that we wanted to go over his returned checks as a matter of business system, he landed them down on me with a frank willingness that was almost painful. I even got him to give me several samples of his handwriting. By the way, did you ever notice his right hand forefinger and thumb?"

Of course I had not. Perhaps the paying teller had, and I said so.

"Sometime and somehow our Mr. Clay has slipped the upper joint of that forefinger out of plumb," narrated my informant. "It does not trouble him in eating, or cutting coupons, or flipping over interest money. Nor when he writes a screed with straight-going letters does he experience any difficulty. A lower loop, however, is his Nemesis."

"Nemesis?" I repeated vaguely.

"Not too strong, that, in this case. The lower loop is the pit I dug for him, and he fell into it. To be plain, when Warner Clay signs his name it is plain sailing. Even when he makes that downward stroke to form the y in his last name, he is all right. Where he comes to turn, however, call it 'looping the loop'—that misplaced joint in his forefinger jars the nerve. If he let the pen have free play it would wander and scribble all over the paper. By study and training, however, he is enabled to instantly stop the pen by pressing down upon it, give his lame joint a rest and a twist, get a new start and wind up the y quite creditably. Only—"

Resilius Marvel drew from his pocket check 953, also a sheet of paper on which he had the recent handwriting samples from our client, also the returned May checks. He placed them before me.

"Feel of those signatures," he directed. 'No, not that way—catch the signature space between your thumb and forefinger. Do you notice any protuberance in the lower surface?"

"N-no," I was forced to admit, and called attention to the usual calloused condition of a bank man's finger tips.

"Take the magnifying glass then," ordered Marvel. "Now, then?"

I saw what he intended I should see. Minute, scarcely perceptible to the naked eye, there was almost a hole through the check surface wherever the loop of the y in Clay was inspected, and on the reversed side, naturally, a tiny protuberance corresponded.

"Nobody but Warner Clay ever did that," declared Marvel. It is the test infallible. As on the returned checks, so on the one claimed forged—the writer depressed the pen point to get a momentary staying power. Those checks were signed by the hand of Warner Clay, all of them, 953 included."

"In other words," I exclaimed, "our client is his own forger!"

"You have it," assented Resilius Marvel, "precisely. We shall not have to retraverse or fortify that conclusion, unless we are forced into a court of law. The point of interest now is Geraldine Farrar."

"The girl cashed the check—why was she given it? She left the city at once—what impelled her? She went into obscurity, leaving no trace behind her—why?" challenged Marvel.

The man's rare humanity spoke out in his questioning, determined face. Viewed in a cold-blooded way, the bank's interest ceased at the discovery of a method of saving its money. A new strain had come into the case—mystery, maybe misery. Cunning or foul play, Resilius Marvel, I saw, was determined to go to the bottom of the proposition.

"When I questioned Clay about his missing ward," resumed Marvel, "his sorrow was touching! He plainly indicated that she had seized an opportunity to acquire a fortune at one deft stroke of the pen. She had no friends, no other relatives than himself, he averred. She had seemed to share his lonely life for the sake of comfort and home. She had had some very distant relatives once, he believed, in far western Canada. One thing I noticed: he was sure in his mind that she could not be found. Circumstances or his own plans were placing her at a sure distance. I insisted on visiting her room. He did not demur. It was a miracle of good order. I found nothing to inspire me in my search—he had prepared for all that—nothing except a scrap of crumpled-up paper lying where he had not discovered it, half way under her writing desk. Nor did he see me secure it. There it is."

It was a mere fragment of note paper. Penciled upon it were these figures: "$19.80," "$4.50," and this one word: "Separamos." I fancied this valueless.

"That and concurrent discoveries gave me a new focal point," explained my companion.

"It is Greek to me," I acknowledged helplessly.

"The word is Spanish," said Marvel. "It means 'separate,' or 'separation,' or something of that sort. Clay had tried to divert me north.' For that reason my mind was fixed south I analyzed '$19.80' and '$4.50' and I made up my mind it appertained to some meditated personal investment. I fixed upon the girl's calculation as to railroad fare. I found that a first-class railway ticket to Galveston is exactly $19.80, and the sleeper tariff exactly $4.50. I did not arrive at this decision until I had gone over a good many time tables, and then confirmed my selection at the railway ticket office. I was not sure of my ground even then, until I had got a line on the letter carrier who delivered mail at the Clay home. The information he gave me was very agreeable to my course of reasoning. Miss Farrar had only one correspondent that he knew of. About every six weeks regularly she received a letter, and its postmark invariably was Galveston. I learned also from a stray remark of Clay that once she had gone to Texas for six weeks, settling some land business for him. The letters were directed in a masculine hand. A lover? At least, and at once—Galveston. On the 8 o'clock train. Be ready."

It was late in the afternoon of our third day at Galveston, and I was reading a newspaper in the lobby of the hotel, when Marvel entered on the jump.

"Wait for nothing," he advised me, and simply kept on going back to the street, myself following, brisk and willing and hopeful.

I had a lively time of it keeping up with Marvel. Every time he consulted his watch he took a new spurt. We finally reached a wharf where a steamer advertised for a run to Havana was just getting ready to cast away.

Marvel drew partly within the shadow of a pile of freight, and I unobtrusively took my position behind him. My companion was not watching the passengers as they went aboard, but I soon discovered that he was watching a man who was.

This latter stood by the gangplank. He was a lithe, swarthy, keen-eyed fellow, suggesting the South American. He would scan every person who went aboard, and then, as he evidently found not what he sought, would take an eager sweeping survey of the wharf, and even beyond it, at pedestrians and vehicles as though in a torment of expectation and suspense.

Finally the last bell rang. Some belated passengers got hurriedly aboard, the gangplank was dropped, and the little dark man stood in profound dejection, evidently suffering under the weight of a severe disappointment.

WE WERE NOT MENACED, ONLY STARED AT AS WE RAN ASHORE.

"The lady is still in Galveston. She was to have gone on that steamer," Marvel advised me. "We should have gone with her. As it is—"

Just then the wiry foreigner gave a start, a jump. He ran forward, his eyes fixed on an automobile that had come up to the wharf. And then my own glance was riveted upon the machine as well. The chauffeur had evidently just learned that they were three minutes too late for the steamer. His passengers looked sorely disturbed. They were two; a tall dark man with great mustachios and a scarred warrior-like face, and a young lady.

This was Miss Geraldine Farrar, and I knew her at a glance. There was a change in her manner since I had last seen her, and in her face as well, as compared with the photograph Marvel carried in his pocket. Her eyes expressed animation, her whole pose was one of energy. Her face was deliciously flushed with excitement. She spoke rapidly to her dignified escort, and then to the chauffeur. The latter received some hurried instructions. He seized the wheel and at once the machine sped away from the wharf.

The wiry foreigner who had seemingly been watching for just this arrival ran forward, looked about for another auto, found none for hire, and sped on the trail of the speeding machine at a gait worthy of a crack professional sprinter.

"This way!" spoke Marvel, seizing my arm and directing a swift dash for a cab. "Keep that machine in view," he ordered the driver—"double pay."

It was a wild rush, this triple race. The auto did not make towards the city center, but along the wharves.

Suddenly, at a spot where a trim yacht was getting ready to leave shore, the automobile came to an abrupt stop. Miss Farrar jumped gracefully to the ground. Her austere escort followed her. He carried two satchels. She taking one of these, they ran to the yacht and clambered unceremoniously aboard. There seemed to be some discussion with the one man in charge. Then he went about his duties and the pretty craft made for the offing.

We were getting so near now that I could read the name of the yacht in gilt letters at her stern: "The Arrow." The little pursuer of the automobile leaped toward the yacht as she pushed off, but Colonel Aloa Gaspard, a revolutionary South American, and present convoy of Miss Farrar lifted a stake from the bottom of the yacht, dealt him a blow and sent him hurling back into the water.

It was done so quickly that by the time we came to the spot where the craft had been moored she was lost in the dim sea mists, and the wiry foreigner stood rubbing his aching head.

Marvel gave me a quiet direction to return to the hotel and took the stranger in tow. When he put in an appearance at our rooms several hours later he briefly stated:

"The man who got the ducking was a Venezuelan spy, who it seems has been watching Gaspard and our young lady for a week, and, learning this, he was my selected pilot, with the denouncement as you have seen. Again he asserts that those two satchels carried by the parties who have skipped us contained dynamite.

Marvel did not seem to worry any over the uncertain shape affairs had taken. He kept busy in his own way. I knew he did a lot of cabling and even used the wireless. The second morning he ushered into our room a stranger.

"This is the gentleman who took charge of our friends on his yacht, 'The Arrow,'" explained Marvel. We bowed, and I saw that the man was a gentleman.

"The promised story, my friend," intimated Marvel in his effective way.

"Why, when that young lady and her military escort bounced aboard my boat two evenings ago," stated the man, "I had just taken a queer commission from the police authorities of Galveston. Know me as Adam Butler, unsuccessful business man, 'nvalid of good repute and mild habits, combining the quest of health with a moderate income easily earned through running a pleasure yacht, and you will discern that nothing could be so far fetched as piracy, or police interference, or affiliation with anything criminal or revolutionary. And yet you will soon see that unwillingly I was made an agent in a stirring episode that may turn out sanguinary, sensational and fairly international in its scope."

The speaker chose good language, and was clear and direct in his narrative.

"The sky was dull and lowering, the bay chopping and streaked with yellow splotches, when a flat boat came creeping along the shore in a way that told me she was crippled in some part of her running gear. This was the afternoon of the day you gentlemen saw me. There were four men in police uniform aboard. One of them I observed wore a captaincy button, and as the unwieldy craft came nearer I recognized him.

"'Hello,' he hailed. 'I know you,' and he smiled and waved his hand in a friendly fashion. 'Remember?'

"'Captain Discoll, I believe.'

"'Father of the bride whose party you took down the coast last week,' added the official. 'You not only know your business, my friend, but you take such good care of your passengers that they have none but the pleasantest memories. By the way—'

"A sudden idea seemed suggested to my official friend as his eye rested on my trim and natty craft. He spoke some words to his companion and the police boat was soon alongside.

"'See here, Mr. Butler,' he said to me, drawing me to one side, 'you would guess a long time before you fixed on what we've got in the hold of that old tub.'

"'Yes?'

"'I think so. Contraband expresses it, in a way. We have four big boxes loaded to the brim with fire arms, weapons and burglar tools confiscated from prisoners. Once a year we load them on a boat, run out a few miles and sink them. We started today, but the boat has gone afoul. Again, we are ordered past the ten-mile limit this time, as some of the plunder has been fished up in the past.'

"'I see,' I observed.

"'It would be a speedy job for you. What do you say—would you let us transfer the rubbish to The Arrow and take our task off our hands—for a consideration, of course?'

"'Gladly,' I answered.

"'I know I can trust you. Just attend to it right and come to headquarters tomorrow with your bill and I'll O. K. it.'

To make a long story short, I was all ready to start on my cruise when that man and girl came aboard. Her escort offered me $500 to make a direct run for a point in the Caribbean. It was a temptation, and I agreed. We reached destination on a fast run, foul as the weather was. When we landed the man made another offer—$5,000 for the yacht. I was so dazzled with all that money that he was in command and away with the craft and the girl before I realized what I had left aboard of the yacht. That is all except that I do not intend to send in any bill to the Galveston police department."

"There is a trifle more to add," remarked Marvel, after the man had left. "The two satchels those people had were swept overboard. From what the yachtsman learned they were bound for Separation Island—a reminder of that word penciled on the slip of paper—remember?— 'Separamos.'"

Resilius Marvel was a quick thinker and never slow in action. Behold us the very next day, a steam launch at our disposal and a man in charge who knew the Caribbean like a book.

Resilius Marvel would not have been what he was had he started on the cruise unaware of what he was running into. Separation Island was one of those innumerable dots on the water north of Venezuela, sometimes an appurtenance of the state, sometimes ceded to a corporation, often sold to individuals. For fifty years it had been a bone of contention among varied claimants. It was in dispute now, as we were soon to learn.

I think I shall never forget the scene that greeted our eyes the morning we reached the island. One end ran up into a bold promontory that was a natural fortress. The remainder of the island, famous for large deposits of a silica nature of sound commercial value, was quite level. Grouped on that portion in the brilliant sunlight was a small army of about one hundred men. As we neared them we stared and wondered.

Never was a coterie of apparent warriors so equipped. There was scarcely a man who had not at his belt half a dozen weapons. They carried knives, daggers, stillettos, pistols, revolvers, sawed-off guns. Then I guessed what had happened—they had discovered that fearful armament aboard The Arrow and had utilized it to the limit.

We were not menaced, only stared at as we ran ashore. The first man to greet us officially was Colonel Aloa Gaspard.

When he knew that we knew of The Arrow and of its contraband load, he was open, smiling and friendly. He was about to do some laborious explaining, when a gun boomed from the promontory and a white flag was waved from that natural rock battlement.

"It is all settled—ah! the dread array of our troops, veritably armed to the teeth, did it! That, and the cash," declared one host. "Gentlemen, your missions and you shall be seen to grandly by Senor Rodney Vincent, who will soon be at your service."

And just then the mysterious one, "the girl who had vanished," appeared.

"I have come to see Miss Geraldine Farrar," explained Resilius Marvel, and her wondering eyes were soon gazing inquiringly into his reassuring ones.

A plain man, Resilius Marvel told a plain story, to witness incredulity, then horror, then grief steal over the expressive face of the young girl.

She was white truth itself, as she explained that Warner Clay had been her guardian for an estate in the south. A month before the present time she had attained her majority. The estate was worth over $100,000, but could not be readily turned into cash.

"I needed money," she confessed—blushingly. "I was engaged to Mr. Rodney Vincent, who owns this island, who has just been negotiating with a false claimant who stole all our weapons and preserved possession of the fortress. Mr. Clay paid me $30,000 cash for my property. The deed on record in Baldwin county, Alabama, will verify that fact. He knew that I would be practically out of the world on this lonely island, and trusted to the impulse of greed to cover my name with a crime, thinking I would not be located."

We found Mr. Rodney Vincent a most estimable young man who worshiped the ground that Miss Geraldine Farrar trod on—the fair young girl who had brought her fortune to his rescue. The dynamite was a thought of the sanguinary Colonel Gaspard, who wanted to blow the intruders clear off the island.

I have pleasant memories yet of the sight of celebration we passed on Separation Island. We went north the next day, prepared to clear the fair name of Warner Clay's ward of all reproach.

When Resilius Marvel, arrived at home, went to confront our bank client with the evidences of his perfidy, I never saw a man turn so craven—nor so yellow. The man left the city as soon as he could sell his property—"flagged" to every bank within the clearing house.

Never Turned a Hair.

"Well?"

"I have here," began the traveler, "a patent electric hair brush—"

"Can't you see I'm bald as an egg?" snapped the man at the door.

"Your wife, perhaps, might—"

"My wife wears a wig. She is as bald as I am."

"Possibly you have a child who—"

"I have. Two months old, and still bald."

"Ah—but maybe you have a dog. I can recommend this brush equally for man and beast."

"Look here, my good man, ours is a Mexican hairless dog. Good day."

The traveler gently replaced the brush in his bag, and fumbled in another corner of it.

"Permit me," he murmured, in honeyed accents, "to show you the latest thing in fly-killers."

Getting His Money's Worth.

"What seems to be the matter with you?" asked the eminent specialist.

"Look here, doc," replied the patient, "How much do you charge for a consultation and examination?"

"Five dollars."

"Well, if I must pay you that sum of money you've got to earn it by finding out all by yourself what's the matter with me."

HOME RULE AND FAIR PLAY!

THE PEOPLE OF BALTIMORE COUNTY ASK NOTHING MORE THAN THIS.

Mayor Preston has cast greedy eyes upon the wealthy and populous "belt" around the city, upon which there is not a cent of debt. It "looks good," to him and his followers, who have swamped Baltimore and hindered its progress with debt which now amounts to nearly $100,000,000. It matters not to him and them that it is not their property. "We want it and we are going to have it", they shout. "We would have it in order to issue more bonds."

BALTIMORE COUNTY AND BALTIMORE CITY ARE SEPARATE UNITS OF THE STATE.

There is no more connection in law between them than there is between Baltimore County and Somerset County, and the city has just as much legal right to annex Crisfield as it has forcibly to take part of Baltimore County. The Constitution of Maryland provides that no part of a county may be annexed without the vote of the people living in the territory proposed to be annexed.

BALTIMORE COUNTY IS NOT OPPOSING A FAIR ANNEXATICN BILL.

But the Field-Preston Force Bill, which a clique of city politicians are trying to "put over" by high-handed methods heretofore unknown in this State, is grossly unfair. It is largely the same old bill which was defeated in the Legislature of 1916, but made worse wherever it was changed. It takes in much more territory—an area one and one-half times as large as the present city—while ONE-HALF THE ANNEX TAKEN IN 1888 IS STILL UNIMPROVED AND VACANT. It contains cunningly devised "jokers", whereby the county will lose the value of the public buildings, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, which it has built in the proposed annex, it will lay special taxes upon all property fronting on the State Roads and IT DOES NOT PROVIDE FOR A REFERENDUM. THE CITY'S REFUSAL TO SUBMIT THE MATTER TO A REFERENDUM IS AN ADMISSION THAT THE BILL IS NOT FAIR. THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IS PLEDGED TO THIS BILL.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY, FAVORING FAIR ANNEXATION, SAYS THE PEOPLE IN THE PROPOSED ANNEX SHOULD HAVE THE CHANCE TO VOTE UPON THE MATTER, AS PROVIDED FOR IN THE CONSTITUTION. IF THE DEMOCRATS WIN THIS FALL THEY WILL BE GIVEN THAT RIGHT. EVERY BELIEVER IN CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT, HOME RULE AND FAIR PLAY SHOULD VOTE FOR THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES.

BALTIMORE COUNTY NON-PARTISAN CITIZENS' PROTECTIVE COMMITTEE

Our Soldier's Mail . . . . . By Frederick J. Haskin

If you are sending mail to soldiers, address and pack it right! This is the behest of an overworked Postoffice Department to the American public. Since the middle of last month camps equivalent, the postoffice point of view, to about 60 good-sized cities have sprung into being in the United States. The order to provide these with postoffices was issued on August 5, and by August 15 mail was being delivered to them regularly from their own branch offices. Among the many mobilizations of industrial and governmental forces that have taken place since America entered the war this was not the least expeditious.

Including National Guard, National Army and Regular Army camps and cantonments, training camps, naval and marine stations, the Postoffice Department now has 60 new branch postoffices, and many of them serve 40,000 to 50,000 men each. Some of them, of course, have only a small part of their quotas at present, but at those under construction there are 7,000 to 10,000 workmen each to serve.

A camp of 40,000 men is equal in its demands upon the Postoffice Department to a city of about 160,000 people, for only about one person in five of average population is a writer and receiver of letters, but every soldier is a writer and receiver of letters—yea, and of many other things. Cakes and candy and cigars, chicken salad and grapes, fried chicken and roast ham and stuffed olives and other dainties wrought by fair fingers, too numerous to mention, too squashy to handle, too perishable to keep, often too poorly packed for even the most patient and patriotic of mail men to successfully transport, are pouring into the camps by the ton.

One camp—Camp Custer, which has not yet all of its quota—is receiving no less than 15 tons of package mail a day, and a large part of this is in the shape of good things from home, daintily wrapped in tissue paper, but often all unprotected against the harsh vicissitudes of railway travel from some town in the North to some cantonment in the South. The boys in khaki are getting almost enough cake and fried chicken to sustain life, without help from the government, but some of this vlounteer grub is hardly recognizable when it arrives. So notice is hereby served that if you want to mitigate the horrors of war for Tommy by sending him a quart of home-made syllabub or an angel cake, you must pack the same in a tin or wooden box, and insulate it with paper against the jars and accidents of transportation.

Furthermore your offering must be correctly addressed or the chances are against its ever arriving at all. Great quantities of mail are reaching all of the cantonments addressed simply to Thomas Jones, Camp Meade, Md. There is no excuse for this unless it is urgently necessary that you communicate with Thomas during the brief period after his arrival and before he has been assigned to his company and regiment. For after he is assigned, it is only by company and regiment that he can be identified, if he is in the Regular Army, therefore, he must be addressed as Private Thomas Jones, Company A, Sixty-fourth Infantry, Camp Lee, Virginia. If he is with the expeditionary forces for Camp Lee should be substituted American Expeditionary Forces. If Thomas is in the National Guard he should be addressed the same way with the addition of the state organization from which he came, thus: Private Thomas Jones, Company B, One Hundred and Fifty-first Infantry (Sixty-ninth New York) Camp Lee, Virginia. If he is in the National or draft Army, he should be addressed in the same way with the addition of his state, thus: Private Thomas Jones, Company C, One Hundred and Thirtieth Infantry (N. J.), Camp Lee, Virginia.

Mail which is not addressed by company and regiment will certainly be long delayed and may be returned to sender as undeliverable. Instructions are being sent to postmasters not to receive package mail unless it is addressed by company and regiment.

These rulings are made necessary by the method which has been adopted for handling the mail of these 60 new soldier cities. The War Department provides at each of the camps and cantonments a building 148 feet in size, to be used as a postoffice with employes and postoffice furniture, and has to connect it up with the Federal postoffice system by way of the nearest first or second class postoffice. The military postoffice becomes a branch of this office, similar to the branches maintained in all large cities. The main postoffice supplies it with stamps and keeps its accounts, but the branch has to do its own distributing and assorting of mail.

It is impossible to maintain a general delivery under these circumstances, or for the postoffice employes to seek out each individual soldier and give him his mail. Accordingly the postoffice assorts the mail by regiments and companies, and delivers the company batches into the hands of "mail orderlies," who are appointed for the purpose. The mail orderly acts as postman and sees that each man in his company gets his mail. Thus no machinery is provided in the military branch postoffice for the delivery of mail that is not addressed by regiment and company. Such mail will go to camp headquarters and may be delivered in the course of time from there.

In providing trained employes for these military postoffices, the Postoffice Deparement has adopted the interesting method of calling for volunteers from the large city postoffices—the only places from which trained employes can be spared, for most of the camps and cantonments are in the South, and the postoffices to which they are attached are too small to spare any employes. Accordingly the Postoffice Department offers to pay the railway fare and the subsistence in camp of any postal employe who wants to volunteer for service in an Army branch postoffice. The response to this call has been prompt. Many men who were rejected for military service have taken this method of getting a glimpse of the military life which attracted them. There is a spice of change and adventure about the work and a little extra money. So there has been no dearth of men, especially young men.

This new postoffice machinery is already working smoothly. There has been no hitch or trouble, except those due to wrongly addressed mail and poorly packed perishables; and the soldiers appreciate the difficulty caused by these things. Telegrams were sent from the Postoffice Department here recently to every postmaster who had a military branch under his supervision asking for a report, and all replied that there had been no complaints. The Postoffice Department praises the cooperation of the War Department and vice versa. All that is needed now to make the soldiers' mail entirely satisfactory is a little co-operation from the public.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

NON-COMS AMONG GARRETT'S BOYS

Several Have Been Appointed Corporals and Sergeants.

Last Saturday, the 13th, looked upon a day as being one of ill-luck, was the opposite for several of Garrett county's soldier boys now in camp at Camp Meade, and these boys are attached also to the 313th Regiment, Company G. of which Claude B. Sweezey is the commander. On Saturday the officer announced the appointment of men who had been selected for promotion to corporals and sergeants.

Those lads still at home who will be sent to Camp Meade with the next quoto should not loose heart, however, as they too will have an opportunity for promotion. Not all of the non-commissioend officers have been selected and the lists will not be completed until after all of the men have been placed at the camp and assigned. Then, too, there will always be room for promotion, for no time is lost in reducing a non-com. who does not make good.

The fortunate ones of the Garrett county soldiers who were appointed as non-coms by Saturday's order were:

To be sergeants—John W. Livengood and Charles Milton Sincell. To be Corporals, Hugh C. McMahon, Albert G. Middleton, Paul R. Liston and William C. Stanton.

X-RAY PLANT

Has Been Installed in the Office of Dr. McComas.

A complete X-ray plant, one of the most modern in existence, has just recently been installed in the office of Dr. Henry W. McComas in Oakland.

The plant, while not as large as some in the country, supplies this community with as modern an equipment as those found in any section of the State. On a test made of the machine a photograph of Dr. McComas hand was made. The machine was placed in one room and the physician in another had his hand upon the wall between the two apartments. The outline of the hand may be seen, while the bones stand out prominently.

The owner of the new machine considers himself very fortunate in securing the equipment as the demand by the government for such equipment has made it almost impossible for the manufacturers to supply others than the War Department.

Five Million to Liberty Loan.

GARRETT LIBERTY LOAN MEETINGS

Two Held Which Were Enthusiastic and Successful.

The campaign in Garrett county on behalf of the Second Liberty Loan opened last Monday morning in Oakland, and if the progress made on that day may be taken as an indication, this county will do her share and more toward providing Uncle Sam with funds necessary to prosecute the present war against Germany and her Allies to a speedy and successful conclusion.

Mr. W. T. Childs and Capt. R. Fuller Shryock, of Baltimore, arrived in Oakland Monday morning from State Liberty Loan Headquarters in that city, and after making the rounds of the banks and business places, getting acquainted and making arrangements for the meeting held that evening, left early in the afternoon for Kitzmiller, where they addressed an enthusiastic meeting, resulting in subscriptions amounting to $22,000, with the promise of more to follow.

The Oakland meeting was scheduled for 8 o'clock that evening and a large crowd gathered in the Maryland Theatre at the appointed hour to hear the speakers and later to do "their bit" in furnishing the sinews of war. The meeting was called to order by Mr. R. E. Sliger, chairman of the Liberty Loan Commitete for Garrett County, and after those present sang "My Country 'Tis of Thee," led by Mr. Childs, who, by the way, possesses a tenor voice of more than ordinary sweetness, and accompanied by Miss Rebecca Naylor at the piano, Rev. W. M. Shultz was called upon for the invocation. "Maryland, My Maryland" was then sung, after which Mr. Childs was introduced as the first speaker. He made a general resume of the great world war from the assassination in Servia, in April, 1914, up to the present time, and recited several instances of atrocities committed by German officers and their men during the war, bringing home the fact that all this might possibly have happened to this country, unprepared as we were for war, and closing with a fervent appeal to those present to do all in their power to help finance the government in the great struggle for liberty. A pleasing feature of Mr. Childs' address was a local incident of which he spoke. He said that in making the rounds of the stores in town that morning he met a young son of German parents, who had saved $80.00 out of the pay his father allows him for his work in the store. He invested $50.00 of this amount in a Liberty Bond, instructing his banker to apply the balance as part payment for a similar bond for his sister. Mr. Childs called attention to the fact that this incident could not be duplicated in all Baltimore, and he doubted if its like could be found in the entire State. The audience readily recognized about whom he was speaking, and when Capt. Schrock stepped forward and summoned Wilhelm Lauer to the stage, the boy was given an ovation. Mr. Childs said he would like to take him along on the balance of the campaign for the Liberty Loan, to show the people how this German family in Oakland had become thoroughly Americanized, not only the boy, but his father as well, having bought bonds.

Capt. Shryock was the next speaker and he drew a vivid word picture of the American soldier at the front—your boy, our boys—handicaped for want of the proper equipment to do well the soldier's duty, putting forth the question in a way that went home home to each and every one of his hearers. He then called for the first subscription, which was promptly responded to by Mr. Michael Boyle, who took a $50 bond for each of his children, $200 in all. This was followed quickly by Mr. William Miller, of Accident, who subscribed for $3,000, and followed up his subscription with a speech in which he outlined a county campaign for the loan. His plan will be given attention by Chairman Sliger. From this time on until the close of the meeting responses

ONLY 20 GARRETT BOYS AT MEADE

Nearly Eighty Were Sent to Camp Gordon, Ga., Tuesday.

Orders issued at Camp Meade Monday, where the Garrett county quota of selected men were sent from Oakland in two contingents some weeks ago, were to the effect that the men pack their equipment and be ready to move at a moment's notice. The order was carried out Tuesday morning when seventy-seven of Garrett county's sturdy sons, along with more than nine hundred other soldiers from the counties of the State (the Baltimore draftees being allowed to remain near their home city) entrained at eight-thirty o'clock for Camp Gordon, Ga., where they will complete their military training.

The men sent south are intended to fill in the gaps of the various commands now at that point. The names of those remaining at Camp Meade are contained in the subjoined letter received this morning from Corporal Albert G. Middleton, which reads as follows:

Tuesday, Oct. 17, 1917.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Tonight finds only a remnant of the Garrett county boys at Camp Meade. The rest left for Camp Gordon in Georgia. Most of the men seemed to enjoy the prospects of the trip south. They felt that they were too far away from home to get home even from here and consequently did not mind going further away.

As far as I have been able to find out only the following boys are now in camp here: Jessie Prando, Archie Savage, Robt. Tichnell, Byard, Bailey and Paul Liston, Eugene Baker, Wade Schlossnagle, Rodeheaver, Simpson, Sam Miller, Wm. Durst, Jonie Durst, Arthur Green, Stanton, Livengood, Sincell, Joe Ross, Robt. Stottler and myself. The order for moving came yesterday and the boys were off this morning. Those who did not go were taken out to drill and when we returned the boys were gone.

The training is stiffening up right along now. We have about all we want to do in a day. Most of the fellows are still very short winded.

The first detail from Company G to go on guard duty went out tonight. We will furnish our share of the guards from now on.

The first list of non-commissioned officers that were appointed for Co. G contains the names of five Garrett county boys: John Livengood and Milton Sincell, sergeants; Paul Liston, Clay Stanton and Middleton, corporals.

Some of the boys had some fun tonight giving a fellow who refused to take a bath a shower. The fellow has been bluffing all sorts of physical defects ever since he came here and refused to drill. He is now doing the dirty work in the kitchen. It does'nt pay to try to bluff here or be a slacker.

With best regards

Corp. A. G. MIDDLETON.

Baltimore Asks A Fair Hearing

Excluding the votes from Baltimore City, Baltimore County and Anne Arundel County, the remaining 21 counties have 21 Senators and 67 Members of the House, not only a majority, but more than 3-5 ths of each House. They can pass or defeat any Bill. They can pass the League Bill, if they deem it fair, or they can amend it so as to make it fair.

The citizens of Maryland who live in Baltimore appeal to these 21 counties for justice, and feel that justice will be done, if their fellow citizens in the counties listen to the voice of their own reason, and do not permit themselves to be misled by

RECKLESS APPEALS TO PREJUDICE.

In recent advertisement the Baltimore County Committee call the effort for City Extension "HYPOCRISY AND DOUBLE-DEALING;" "A PLAN OF CONQUEST WHICH WILL GIVE THE POLITICAL RULERS OF THE CITY CONTROL OF THE STATE." They say "ANNEXATION MEANS CITY RULING STATE;" They say:—

"Mayor Preston has cast greedy eves upon the wealthy and populous 'belt' around the city, upon which there is not a cent of debt. It 'looks good' to him and his followers, who have swamped Baltimore and hindered its progress with debt which now amounts to nearly $100,000,000. It matters not to him and them that it is not their property. 'We want it and we are going to have it,' they shout. 'We would have it in order to issue more bonds.'"

They say:

"But the Field-Preston Force Bill, which a clique of city politicians are trying to 'put over' by high-handed methods heretofore unknown in this State, is grossly unfair."

There is not the slightest foundation in fact for any of these ill-tempered statements. The only excuse for making them is the fact that the League Bill leaves it to the Legislature, and not to the people in the belt, to decide what is fair in the matter.

The people of Baltimore do not ask that the question be left to them to decide; though that would be just as reasonable as to leave it to the voters in the belt; they ask that it be left to the Legislature.

NOT FAIR OR REASONABLE TO PUT THE GROWTH OF THE CITY AT THE MERCY OF THOSE WHO SETTLE AROUND ITS BOUNDARIES.

HON. JOHN V. L. FINDLAY, one of the great men of Maryland of his day, in an opinion upon the Act of 1888, said:

"Nor is it altogether fair that when provision is made for taking a vote that the city should be left out, as it has been in this case."

HON. HENRY D. HARLAN, a Harford County boy who came to Baltimore and made good, was for 21 years Chief Judge of the Supreme Bench, in an interview in The Sun of September 17th, 1917, said:

"Those who locate near the city limits are bound to know that the time may come when the Legislature will extend the limits and take them in. No principle of right, or justice, or fairness, places in their hands the power to stop progress and development of the city, especially in view of the fact that the large majority of them have located near the city for the purpose of getting the benefit of transacting business, or securing employment, or following their profession in the city. They would be too apt to view the question from the standpoint of their personal interests, whereas it is the duty of the Legislature to decide the question from the standpoint of the public welfare."

The Committee on Draft of the Bill, in their report, say:

"There was no reason for giving to the people in the territory immediately surrounding the City a veto power upon the progress and development of the City."

This was signed by every member of the Committee, a majority of whom are county men, viz:

W. CALVIN CHESNUT and JOHN H. RICHARDSON, of Baltimore County, HON. W. LAIRD HENRY, Former Judge of Court of Appeals, of Dorchester. SENATOR JOHN F. MUDD, of Charles, BENJAMIN A. RICHMOND, Esq., of Allegany, and ALEX. R. HAGNER, Esq., of Washington County.

In Daly vs. Morgan, 69 Md. 465, the Court of Appeals said:

"No one knew better than the framers of the Constitution of 1867, that the time must come, and that not far distant, when the extension of the limits of a great city like Baltimore would be absolutely necessary to its proper growth and development."

It is not unfair and absurb to submit a matter affecting the City of Baltimore, in the language of the Court of Appeals, "absolutely necessary to its proper growth and development," to a majority of the voters who have settled just outside its boundaries? It would be just as reasonable to submit a law imposing a license tax on automobiles to a referendum to the owners of automobiles.

LEGISLATIVE PRACTICE IN THIS STATE.

In the interview above referred to Judge Harlan also said:

"If there is anything wrong in subjecting people to a city government and city taxes, without their consent or without the consent of a majority of them, it has never been thought so, because it has been the almost unbroken practice of the Legislature to do that very thing."

With only two exceptions, every one of the one hundred or more Acts which the Legislature has passed incorporating cities and towns, and extending their limits, have been passed without any referendum. In fact, prior to 1864, there was no limitation on the power of the Legislature to divide counties and create new counties out of the old ones or out of parts of old ones. It was the common practice of the Legislature to change county lines and city lines, and no one ever thought that any principle of home rule or fair play was violated. In the War Constitution of 1864, for the first time the Constitution imposed a limit on the power of the Legislature to change county lines. In 1867 this limitation was continued, with a modification which makes it apply only where the change in the county line is made for the purpose of taking people out of one county and putting them in another county. This was done to prevent gerrymandering which had become quite familiar with regard to congressional districts, and which, but for this limitation, could be very easily worked in Maryland today. A little change in the dividing line between Baltimore county and Carroll county would make two solidly Democratic counties instead of one Democratic and one doubtful county, and would give Carroll county two more members of the Legislature without any loss of members in Baltimore county; so, a change in the line between Charles and Prince George's counties would make two safely Republican counties instead of one Republican and one doubtful.

An extension of the limits of Baltimore City will not affect the political complexion of Baltimore and will not give the city a single additional vote in the Legislature nor take one vote away from Baltimore county or Anne Arundel county.

The limits of Frederick, Cumberland, Annapolis, Hagerstown, Bladensburg, Easton, Cambridge, Centreville, Chestertown, Crisfield, Denton, Elkton, Oakland, Salisbury, and other cities in the State, have been extended without a referendum. The limits of Baltimore City have been four times extended without a referendum.

THE TWO EXCEPTIONS:

By the Act of 1874, Chapter 224, the Legislature provided for extending the limits of Baltimore City one mile east, one mile west and two miles north, but the Act contained a referendum to the voters in the territory to be added and the extension was defeated at the election and city extension set set back for fourteen years.

By the Act of 1888, Chapter 98, the Legislature provided for extending the limits of the city two miles north, two miles west and one mile east, but the Act contained a separate referendum for each section, and the eastern section—which then had the largest population—voted to stay out; the northern and western sections voted to come in. But, In order to get even this lopsided extension, it was thought necessary to offer terms which were grossly unfair to the city, so that to this day, on millions of dollars worth of real estate in the heart of Baltimore City, a tax rate of only 65 cents is being paid to the city.

In order to extend the street system of Baltimore into this territory in any systematic way, it has been found necessary to tear down thousands of houses which had been built, in a haphazard way, where streets ought to have been. All this waste, amounting to millions of dollars, would have been prevented if the city limits had been extended sooner and streets laid out before the houses were built.

The only way to get the city limits extended when they ought to be extended, and on terms fair to the city, to the belt affected, and to the State, is to have them extended by the Legislature. The Legislature is better qualified to judge of the question than the voters in the belt, who have—or think they have—a personal interest in preventing the growth and development of the city.

FROM THE NORTHWEST

A Highly Interesting Letter from Rev. O. A. Bremer.

To the Editor of The Republican,
Oakland, Maryland.

Dear Mr. Sincell: For the multitude of kindnesses I shall ever remain indebted, but in the matter of correspondence I shall try to clear my conscience. At the same time if I can throw this stone beyond you and reach a few of my friends through the columns of your good paper, I shall be glad. However I am in no mood to select words or weigh phrases, so if you find this below the standard of your paper, you may throw it out without offence.

Our first impressions of Spokane were not good. We reached here April 29th and found it raining. This city is known the country over as "Sunny Spokane," but for six weeks we saw very little of Mr. Sun for I believe it rained every day. You may believe me if you will, those were hard days, and the homesick feeling grew. Especially was this true on Sundays when we came to our little old store building that we had to call church, and preach to six or seven people.

Then on the fifteenth of June the sun did come out of hiding, and we began to have some wonderful weather, and for ninety five days there was not a cloudy sky and not a drop of rain. We soon began to miss the rain, but now we like the dryness, and believe it has meant much to all of us in the way of health.

The Spokane climate is very much like that of Oakland, except that we have very little wind, and very little rain. But we are at an altitude of two thousand feet, with wonderful days, and still more wonderfully cool nights. We have splendid crops here, but the highly developed irrigating system alone makes this possible.

From our home we can see Mount Spokane, the highest mountain point, forty five miles away and at most times it seems but a mile or so away. From this point you may look down upon twenty-two different lakes, which furnish the water for the thirsty fields.

In the matter of game this is truly a sportsman's country for there is every variety of wild life. At the present time the lakes are covered with thousands of ducks, and I leave in the morning for two days of this kind of sport. It will be my first vacation except for one happy day of fishing. In October, the last two weeks, I am going to break away from my work for a little longer period, and spend two weeks with a pack horse in the mountain for bear and deer. I may report my success later.

Now something concerning our work which I believe will be interesting to the people with whom we worshiped for three years of delightful service. As we said above, at first it seemed like a big hopeless task. We started out with six members, and an old partly fallen store room as our place of worship. Gradually we improved our membership and then some weeks ago we improved our location. We now have a newly built, modern, and nicely decorated hall, as our church. The attendence is steady and on the increase.

On Sunday we had something over thirty at church and over forty at Sunday school. We have paid for a church lot valued at two thousand dollars, on which we hope to build in the spring, and are now negotiating for a four thousand dollar property to be used as a parsonage later on. We mention these facts only that the people whom we counted as our friends may know the truth as to what we are actually doing. We are still far from making good. The Organization we are developing is still a frail, weak thing but by the Grace of God it grows stronger every day. We want the prayers of our Christian friends, for when we cease to believe in prayer we will no longer preach the Word.

Our hearts are hungry for the news so richly crowded in your columns. What a splendid array of young men Oakland and Garrett county have sent forth to fight for Uncle Sam. In our own home we didn't want the war; then it came and now we are all for it. We have a brother already in the service and he's a volunteer.

Now, Mr. Sincell, I fear I am making this long and tiresome and I'm going to quit. Don't forget us back there, and if you ever get started this way, come all the way and visit us. We have the promise of a touring party in nineteen twenty. But that is a long way off. How delighted we would be to entertain some travel wearied parties from Garrett county, Maryland. We like this country, and it is big with opportunities, and advantages, and our work for the present and some years in the future is here, and we'll stay till our work is done, but there is a homesick hunger in the heart that can only be satisfied in Oakland. Such is the Call of the Christian Ministry, that it may take him away from all that is dear to his heart, into a very wilderness of hardships and trials. Such is this western desert. A waste place of the earth made fertile by the genius of man. And that Genius came, not to find freedom to worship God, as did the Settlers of the east, but to exploit this country for gold and gain. So from the beginning here, money has been god and the thing that money buys, pleasure, is king. And it will be a long hard fight before these are displaced for the Christ. But the Christian Church is making her influence felt. For years the Presbyterian and Methodist churches have been firmly entrenched, and have been a tremendous power for righteousness. My own church is just entering the field and it is my privilege to break the ground for the planting.

We hope you remember us as kindly as we remember you.

Very truly yours,
O. A. BREMER.

FOOD WILL WIN THE WAR

An Appeal to The Women of Maryland.

This country, for the first time in recent history, faces a food shortage of a peculiar kind. There is sufficient food for all, but there is not sufficient food of certain kinds. The Government appeals to the housewives of the Nation in this emergency. The week of October 21 to 27 inclusive, has been set apart for a nation-wide Food Conservation Campaign, in which all the women of the State are asked to take part.

It is not so much a question of saving money as it is a question of saving food. No matter how much one is willing to pay, money will not grow wheat or sugar between harvests, and will not produce meat when the cattle are not in existence. What the women of the Nation are asked to do, therefore, by the Government, and what they must do if the supply is to last over this emergency, is to substitute other articles of diet for the staple things in which a shortage is threatened.

The most important articles of food in which there is a serious scarcity are wheat, meat, dairy products and sugar.

Wheat is absolutely essential to the conduct of the war abroad. The European nations have not been trained to the use of cornmeal and other grains. More than that, wheat is peculiarly adapted for war-time uses, because of the length of time wheat bread can be kept after baking, as contrasted with corn bread. Corn meal is not suited for export in the ground state, and the European countries are not in the habit of grinding corn and are not provided with the machinery for doing so. Many of the sources of supply on which England, France and Italy have drawn in the past are cut off and the United States is called upon to make up this shortage by exportation. If the people of this country consume the entire amount of wheat they are accustomed to consume, the war cannot be successfully brought to a finish. But the war must go on, and therefore, the wheat supply must be drawn upon with care. Unless this is done both we at home, and our soldiers abroad must suffer from the shortage. All that is necessary is that every housewife shall substitute, so far as possible, corn meal and other grains for wheat flour. If this is done wisely and universally, the supply from the last harvest will carry both this Nation and the Allies until the next harvest.

As in the case of wheat flour, much of the meat supply for the army must be exported from this country. The supply of living animals is not sufficient to meet this emergency and afford the customary amount of meat consumed in this country. The Government, therefore, urges that every family, so far as possible, substitute fish and other artcles of diet for meat supplies.

The demands for meat abroad have led to the slaughtering of the herds and cutting off of the supplies of milk and butter. The high price of beef in this country has led also to excessive slaughter in this country, so that a serious decrease in the supply of milk and butter is faced at the very time when the export demand for dairy products is at its height. It is essential, for the proper conduct of the war, that no waste be permitted in milk or butter, and that the consumption of these articles by each family be reduced, so far as possible, without injury to health.

The supply of sugar is not sufficient to carry the civilized world through the next harvest, if America continues to use that article as extravagantly as in the past. This country is consuming at the present time twice as much sugar per person as France. It is absolutely necessary that this amount be cut down to actual needs.

It is ordered that these facts may be brought home to every housewife of the United States that the department of Food Administration of the Federal Government is planning a nation-wide campaign during the last week in October. This campaign aims at a house-to-house canvass and the securing of a pledge from every housewife to co-operate in this food conservation campaign.

If every household in the State of Maryland is to be visited and the matter clearly explained to the housewife, and her signature to the pledge card obtained, there must be engaged in this work during the week of October 21st to 27th, a large number of women who will give their time as officers of the Government to making the explanations and securing the signatures. Every woman in Maryland is therefore urged to do two things: first, to sign the pledge card for herself and her family; and secondly, to volunteer to assist in the canvass during the final week of October. Every woman who will volunteer her services is urgently requested to send her name and address to the Maryland Food Conservation Campaign Headquarters, 518 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md. She will then be assigned a definite territory to cover in her own neighborhood, and will be issued the proper credentials and the proper badge for her work.

The situation is serious. Unless this plan of conservation is carried out by the women and men of the United States, both our soldiers abroad and our families at home will find themselves without an adequate supply of these important articles of diet before the next twelve months have elapsed. The Government has chosen this method of securing food conservation, and calls upon every loyal woman to join in the work just as it has called upon every man of proper age for service in the field. The war cannot be won without the soldiers, and the soldier cannot win without food.

The woman who enrolls in this work is doing it as a recognized representative of the National Government at the demand of the National Government, and is rendering important service as evidence of her loyalty and her desire to co-operate in the war for democracy. Forward your name and address at once as requested above. Issued under the authority of Herbert C. Hoover, National Food Administrator, by the Maryland Headquarters, National Food Conservation Campaign.

FRANCIS KING CAREY,
Chairman Executive Committee.

Uncle Sam Needs 10,000 Stenographers and Typewriters at Once

Now that Uncle Sam has the young men of the country in training for military service, he finds that he needs 10,000 typewriter operators and stenographers and typewriters, both men and women, for the Departments at Washington. The Civil Service Commission has notified all of its 3,000 boards of examiners that they should put forth their best efforts to secure these urgently needed workers. While examinations are now held weekly in 450 cities, the Commission states that arrangements will be made to have an examination held at any accessible place where a small class of applicants can be secured. The entrance salaries range from $1,000 to $1,200 a year. Promotion is reasonably rapid to those whose services prove satisfactory. No appointments can be made to these or other positions in the Federal classified civil service unless authorized by the Civil Service Commission under the civil service law. Any information to the contrary is unauthorized. This is a splendid opportunity to serve your country. Full information may be secured from the secretary of the board of civil service examiners at the post office in Oakland.

Variety of Time in Honolulu.

On Papaikou plantation the clock marks three-quarters of an hour ahead of standard time for the day. In fact, there are three ways of fixing the hour of the day on the plantation—solar time, standard time, and railway time, writes A. P. Taylor, Honolulu correspondent. The Hilo Sugar company has put the time half an hour ahead. At Pahala the Hawaiian Agricultural company has advanced all the clocks 40 minutes. Nearly all the other plantations on the island have gained from 15 minutes to one hour. They may decide to adopt a uniform time.

CUT OUT CROOKED STICKS

Use of Dead Wood for Fuel Is Also Applied to Scoundrels and the War.

Forestry experts in New York, a state which has given much conserving attention to its wealth in trees, urge farmers to help the country meet the high cost of fuel by making more use of the dead and dying timber in their wood lots. They are advised to burn in their stoves and grates the fallen logs still sound enough to be converted into fire wood and to cut down and utilize crooked trees obviously foredoomed to worthlessness as timber, no matter how long they may be allowed to stand.

This is good advice, and there is a human moral in the crooked stick part of it, says an exchange. The same stress of war times, which led to the appeal issued to New York farmers in sifting out crooked men. Some rascals will profit by war conditions, but in the broad view of the nation's affairs the sound and straight will come to the front. The country can't take chances with scoundrels. It must cut crooked sticks out of the life-and-death work of the war, in places of authority

Back in the dark ages, when the management of the Erie railroad was not all that it should have been—the rolling stock needing more oil and the common stock less water—a westbound passenger train jolted into Corning one day two hours behind time and halted to patch up the engine and take on such passengers as were in no hurry and preferred waiting to walking.

Just as the train was about to jerk itself in motion an excited individual came rushing along the platform, dragging a heavy carpetbag with one hand and waving a telegram with the other.

"You must wait!" he shouted, breathlessly. "I'm in an awful hurry! I want to get to Buffalo the worst way!"

SOLDIERS FIRST, THE RULE

Gallant Warriors Willing to Give Right of Way to Visitors, but Plans Are Changed.

It was a Sunday evening at Ft. Benjamin Harrison and the crowd of sisters, mothers, aunts and sight-seers was waiting at the interurban station for a car. At last one came. At the same time a crowd of soldiers with leave to go to the city arrived. It was evident that the lone car and its small trailer could not carry all the passengers. The soldiers held a little consultation, and then suddenly offered to the women the use of the train. They said they would wait for another car. The train filled with sisters, mothers, aunts and sight-seers left the little group, and the soldiers were thanked many times for the favor.

At the siding just east of town the train bearing all these civilians was stopped and backed on to a switch. Two minutes later a car loaded with soldiers passed them on the main track, making a bee-line for town.—Indianapolis News.

"Yes, indeed," replied aunty warmly. "Why do you ask?"

"Well, then, how would you make a living?"

Aunty subsided.

Mean.

"He paid me a compliment."

"That's queer. I didn't think you had one coming."

Hits the Bullseye.

The Comparison.

"Experience is the best teacher."

"Yes, but time gives us a lot more wrinkles."

Progress.

"Are you interested in food control?"

"I have gotten away past it. What I'm interested in now is appetite control."

The New Way.

Chancellor—Sire, we will have to camouflage some of our diplomatic schemes.

Kaiser—Then paint them a neutral tint.

More Expensive Trimming.

Halefeller (wildly)—What! Do you mean to tell me, woman, that it cost $39 to get that hat trimmed? Jumping Jupiter! But that milliners' game is the limit!

Mrs. Halefeller (sweetly)—Really? Why, I understood it costs some men more than that to get trimmed in a poker game.

Relieving Anxiety.

"What makes you so thoughtful, Algernon, dearest?"

"I was just thinking of the disturbance to business caused by the war, darling. Now, they say there is going to be a sugar shortage in the United States."

"Well, my own, don't get worried. I would just as soon have a nice, long automobile ride as a box of chocolates, any time."

MR. DANIEL M. LOHR KILLED IN GEORGIA

Young Lumberman Met His Death by Upsetting of His Automobile.

Daniel M. Lohr was instantly killed Monday evening, Oct. 1, near Crawfordsville, Ga., when the steering gear of the car he was driving, broke. The car ran up a bank and was upset, pinning Mr. Lohr under the car where he was found dead a few minutes afterwards by the driver of a passing car.

Mr. Lohr had been in North Carolina and Georgia for six years, in the lumber business. His friend, W. T. Hamilton, of Georgia, and uncle, F. W. Bender, who met Mr. Hamilton with the body at Washington, D. C., arrived at Springs Thursday evening with the remains.

Funeral services were held Friday morning at the Mennonite church at Springs, by Rev. N. E. Miller, assisted by Rev. E. E. Oney, of Salisbury.

Mr. Lohr was the eldest son of the late Eli and Barbara (Berder) Lohr, of Bittinger, Md., and is survived by his wife, one son, four brothers and five sisters.—Key. Sale Republican.

THE DEATH RECORD.

CATHERINE LUCILE WEBER.

Catherine Lucile Weber, the little three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph H. Weber, died at the home of her parents in Mt. Lake Park early Wednesday morning.

Although she had been ailing for some time, her death came as a great shock, as not many knew of her serious illness, which was incurable and progressed toward the latter stage with great rapidity. Everything was done for her which medical science could suggest, but to no avail, and she now sleeps quietly and peacefully, safe in the arms of Jesus, awaiting His call in the resurrection morning.

She was a child of great beauty, and the darling and idol of her parents' hearts—the sunshine of the home, greatly beloved by all who knew her, and the bereaved parents have the sincere sympathy of a host of friends.

The funeral services will be held at the residence of Mrs. H. Weber, Friday afternoon at 3:30, and interment will be in the family burying-ground.

The services will be conducted by Mr. W. F. VanAmburgh, of Brooklyn, New York.

Destruction of Automobile.

A new National touring car owned and driven by Attorney William A. Gunter, of Cumberland, and having been recently purchased by Mr. Gunter was totally wrecked by fire Friday at the top of Big Savage mountain while Mr. Gunter was en route to Oakland. The car was valued at $2,000 and was insured for that amount.

Estray Notice.

To Our Dear Departed.

DEDICATED TO THEIR MEMORY
BY ST. ELMO

Now that Autumn days are waning
How one's thoughts ebbs far away
To a quiet, peaceful graveyard
Where sleeps friends of yesterday.

O, how solemn! O, how sacred!
Is that city of the dead—
See the bright and glorious sun-light
'Round each tomb a halo shed.

Sleep thou on, O dearest comrade
Life's turmoil for e'er will cease
To disturb thy blissful slumber,
Or destroy thy perfect peace.

Ah! my heart nigh burst with anguish
As I saw thee fade and die—
But for Faith's sweet consolation
That thou live beyond the sky.

Hark! I hear celestial music
Played by angel bands on high
And loved voices I distinguish
In God's home beyond the sky.

Gaze on marble shafts a-gleaming
In the Autumn's twilight glow
Where the leaves are gently falling
On the grass grown mounds below.

Farewell, loved ones, I must leave you
Tho' my thoughts will ever stray
To this solemn, sacred, city,
Where sleeps friends of yesterday.

KITZMILLER

Capt. R. F. Shryock and W. F. Childs, of Baltimore, accompanied by Mr. R. E. Sliger, of Oakland, visited town Monday in the interest of the second Liberty Bond sale. Capt. Shryock and Mr. Childs spoke on the subject at a meeting held in the Maryland Theatre. Over twenty-two thousand dollars worth of bonds were subscribed for. Other subscriptions have come in later. It is probable that the full apportionment, twent-nine thousand dollars, will be taken before the campaign closes.

The Red Cross work begun several weeks ago is still holding the interest of many of our people. About four hundred dollars has been paid in on the general fund, and there are about one hundred paid up members of the society. Murphy; 3rd vice chairman, Mrs. Robert Brown; sec'y. Gladys Hamill; treas., B. F. Inskeep.

The supply committee includes Mrs. C. E. Bissell, chairman, Mrs. Robert Brown, Mrs. Sue Laughlin, Mrs. Joseph Marvell, Mrs. Elzie Knotter and Mrs. Charles Murphy, who is secretary. The members are engaged in knitting sweaters and hospital shirts. Thirty-six of these shirts have been finished and shipped. ESTABLISHED 1884

Mr. Farmer, Listen!

During the Fair we will sell you Farm Machinery (such as we have a good stock of) for less than the market price today.

We have the assurance that machinery of all kinds will be very much higher in price for 1918 than present prices, owing to the high price of steel and labor.

Machinery as yet has not advanced in proportion to the price of steel that enters into the making of same.

We have a good stock of Mowers, Rakes, Tedders, Grain Drills, Manure Spreaders, (wide spread) a few Olive Plows and a nice stock of Wagons on hand.

We will give next year's terms on Harvesting Machinery. We think we are safe in saying that Binders will be $200, Mowers $75 or $80, Rakes $40, and all other machinery in proportion for 1918.

Whether you buy of us or not our advice is to get your machinery for next year now.

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

MY LADY VITRIOL

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

THERE was no shadow of a doubt in my mind as I entered the offices of the United Bankers' Protective association that Resilius Marvel was studying out a new "case." He nodded to me in an abstracted way. On the glass-slabbed table before him were a dozen or more little rolled-up wads of paper. I knew they represented puppets he had been moving about, shaking up, almost talking to, almost making them talk to him—separating, combining, analyzing, in fact winnowing facts with a sieve of probability.

"I think I've got it," he said, sweeping his mimes from the table with an air of precision and finality. "You have come in at the finish, probably. You were in at the start, so you will have a glimmering idea of what it is all about when I speak one word—Ransome."

"That is suggestive," I told Resilius Marvel, "but scarcely enlightening. I fancied that Alison Ransome was a closed chapter in the suppressed sensations of local banking circles."

"What! with one hundred thousand dollars unaccounted for, and the gag placed with all hands around?" derided the great one. "Hardly!"

Ransome had been anybody's friend and everybody's favorite. He had broken into banking about a year previous in the eager, rollicking fashion of a college lad full of financial theories and expecting some day to gain a presidency in a jump. His uncle was the big man in the Unity National bank, and Alison skipped over messenger service, "the books" and the currency pen in a very brief period, and had charge of the ponderous and opulent money vaults with three men to help him fill an easy job.

Then one day a big sensation was born at the Unity National. Ransome and a bank policeman who had left the institution two hours previous, the former handcuffed to a treasure satchel, returned, both of them white-faced and scared looking. They bore the satchel casually enough now, for one side of it showed a circular gash with half the surface flapping loose, and emptiness where there had been fifty thousand dollars in neatly packed and labeled national bank notes.

In a word, this happened: A bank at Riverton, a suburb twenty miles out, had made a special deposit of the money noted, subject to call and personal delivery when required. It was a special fund and a larger sum in ready cash than the suburban bank cared to risk carrying. Besides that the transaction was trusted by the Unity National. The call of that morning had been anticipated for several days. Ransome was deputized to deliver the money and bring back a receipt.

He never qualified for the receipt and he and his guard never got as far as the suburban bank. Once aboard the train and occupying one seat together, in order to rest comfortably the handcuff was unlocked and the satchel was set on the car floor. The guard retained hold of the end of the chain, and Ransome set his feet firmly on the satchel so it could not be budged without his knowing it.

Lo and behold! in spite of all their precision, as they neared the end of their brief journey and lifted the satchel to rehandcuff it to the wrist of Ransome, it was discovered empty. That is, some one occupying the seat directly behind them had reached under the tilting footrack, had inserted a keen shoe blade within the leather receptacle and had quietly lifted out its contents. The train had stopped at all local stations, so the clever thief might have left the train at any one of six stops.

Not a soul recalled even noticing the missing passenger. The shoe knife was found on the car floor. Also a cane, light and somewhat peculiar as to its end fitting—of which more anon. It was now in the possession of the man who had reawakened in my mind the little history I am trying to epitomize in my struggling, faulty way.

Neither money nor thief was found. No possible blame could attach to young Ransome. It marked him, however, as an unlucky wight with a big loss to his record. Then followed a happening that placed him in the "hoodoo" class. It was in connection with the bank cash reserve, the real strength and sinew of the institution, kept sacred and apart within the holy of holies of the Unity National. When foreign capitalists visited the bank, or it was policy and business to impress a client, or ruralite correspondents were in evidence, it was the practice to show them over the institution, winding up with a view of the treasures of the great inner vault where real money was really kept.

As in all large banks the Unity National maintained its actual cash reserve in permanent form. Thus there were packages representing $10,000, $50,000, even $100,000. In these the notes were of large denomination, mostly $100, $1,000, and some $10,000 bills. To facilitate the work of the bank examiner, these packages were originally verified and sealed at the local sub-treasury and stamped as to amount officially. When the government examiner visited the bank he would simply count the packages, accepting their stamped value, tossing them aside and aggregating amounts, even as you and I the small change for a dollar.

One day it was necessary to use a large amount of the reserve cash, a $50,000 package included in the aggregate was found to contain, instead of fifty $1,000 bills, exactly fifty ones. That package had been passed from hand to hand for over a year, its stamped value always accepted without hesitation. The cord enclosing it, duly covered with government seals, was apparently all right. There was nothing in the exterior appearance of the package to indicate tampering or substitution.

Here was a cold, clear fact, however—$49,950 short. The sub-treasury agent looked over the opened package, casually inspected the coverings, and calmly called attention to three facts that were incontrovertible: the string was not government string, the wax in the seals was not government wax and the paper enclosing the package did not bear the government water mark. In other words, the government disputed ever delivering the package to the Unity National. Someone had substituted the one containing the one-dollar bills a month back—two, three, six—or yesterday, or today. It was the duty of Alison Ransome to guess how it could have been done, for he was responsible for the deeds and misdeeds of the department.

Resilius Marvel had been called in. It took him a day to decide that nobody in the bank had worked the substitution. When he came to examine the wrapper that had enclosed the substituted bills, he found that it had been a discarded covering for some other package at one time, such as were thrown into the waste room. The figures had been changed, but the official stamp helped through the imposition. As to the seals, they had been broken in opening the package, so their recent real condition could not be estimated.

At the time I was a silent lounger in a dark corner in Marvel's private office when he held a rapid fire colloquy with this same Alison Ransome. I felt sorry for the young fellow, for he was so artless, so distressed, so clear in his statements, that there was not a false note palpable in what he said. He had brought the visitor's register with him. Spread out on the same glass-topped table where I now confronted Marvel, the twain went over it line by line.

There were foreign and sight-seeing visitors, soon disposed of. The representatives of country banks came under cynosure with no results warranting suspicion. Every name on the register was tallied off quite satisfactorily until they came to a delicate line announcing Miss Vera Tithenor.

"Credited to whom?" Marvel had challenged, keeping his finger on the penciled initials after the name and looking Ransome squarely in the face, who flushed like a schoolboy and blurted out:

"Myself."

I noticed Marvel just there start slightly.

"A friend—a relative?"

"A friend, yes," answered Ransome; "well, I might better say an acquaintance. I knew the lady only casually at the time. She expressed a wish to go through the bank and of course I had to be courteous. Then she brought a friend. She was very much interested in bank details, saying her father and her uncle had been in that line once."

"Tall, fair?" insinuated Marvel, and I knew he was prompted to pursue the topic by the vagrant thought noted.

"Tall, fair—very fair," acceded the young fellow, with almost a sigh.

"Why, no!" exclaimed Ransome, with a hard stare. "What a strange question to ask, sir! Blue eyes! Disfigured! Indeed, no, sir—eyes black as a sloe, and very bright and—bewitching. I've got to say it," explained the speaker, with a slight laugh, "for to tell you the truth, I fancied I was in love with Miss Tithenor at the time."

"And now?" interrogated Marvel, mercilessly.

"I have not seen her for weeks. I understand she has gone abroad."

The color of the eyes seemed to settle the matter with Marvel, and he checked off the name. After that evening I considered the case abandoned, for I had not heard Marvel mention it since. The bank quietly buried the circumstances, but young Ransome left its employ a week later. I understood that he had joined some small brokerage firm. There was no imputation as to his honesty, but the luckless loss of $100,000 to the bank stood against him on the records.

And now Resilius Marvel, with his paper wad puppets and his mention of a half-forgotten name had revived in my mind the facts I have just stated—to prepare me, I was sure, for the second volume of what I had accounted to be a closed book.

He now said:

"And so we arrived at a re-opening of the Ransome incident. I use the singular, for the substituted sub-treasury package and the rifled bank satchel were parts and parcels of one plot, schemed out by one master mind, with more to come."

"I am interested," I said, and prepared to listen.

Marvel opened the broad drawer of the table to take out a long, thin article. It was a cane, slight in looks, but I found later on handling it, strong and rigid as a steel bar.

"The cane you found in the car where the satchel was ripped open," I began.

"No," he dissented; "one something like it, but this is quite another cane. Naturally, losing one, the original owner supplied his equipment with another."

"Equipment?" I repeated.

"Kit is better," added Marvel. "See here."

He held it so that the lower end was directly towards me. He manipulated some clutch or screw in the handle. There protruded then from the hollow bottom of the cane a sloping piece of metal about half an inch square.

"Yes," nodded my friend, "this cane is a masked screwdriver. About three months since a man, later giving the name of William Goldsmith, started to leave a street car. In doing so his foot met an obstruction. He plunged forward, struck the floor and was lifted out to the street to await the ambulance, having suffered a dislocated shoulder. The company was glad to settle with him for fifteen hundred dollars. Investigation showed that a screw holding a metal plate to the bottom of the car had come loose and worked up nearly its length. The charge of negligence against the railway company, therefore, was patent. I heard of the case quite incidentally, but when I did two points suggested immediately interested me. I had on my list an ambulance-chaser worker who had been an acrobat, and who had the power of throwing his shoulder or hips out of joint to order. His graft was to work accident, street car and insurance companies, and when the cane was shown me I guessed that its end had been used to lift the screw in the car floor so as to give the schemer an opportunity to stumble over something. When I ran down this alleged William Goldsmith and had a look at him, I recognized him as an old-timer long off the local books, but now apparently returned to his former harvest fields. He had come back, it seemed, with a new repertoire. His former prize dodge was the lost eye."

"The lost eye?" I queried in amazement.

"Yes. It is a trivial element in the great aggregate, but to explain briefly—William Goldsmith, alias Tod Ferret, originator of quite a clever scheme for raising the wind when in need of funds. He would approach a fruit stand and make some slight purchase. Suddenly he would put his handkerchief up to his eye and appear greatly distressed, while pulling over the stock in a frantic search. He would inform the proprietor of the stand that he had lost his glass eye, and after a search would tell him to make a closer look and he would call again and gladly give twenty-five dollars if he found the eye. In about an hour an accomplice would appear, also make a purchase, pretend to find the eye, disclose it, and the stand man having in mind the reward offered for it would bargain for it at ten or fifteen dollars."

"And this Ferret?"

"This glass eye specialist," pursued Marvel," is also the owner of that cane. He is the man who stole the $50,000 from the satchel young Ransome and the bank officer carried on the suburban train."

"Oh, you know that?"

"And considerably more."

"I can realize that, for you never waste time on preliminaries that have not a final important focus. I presume this Ferret has retired from his professional duties to enjoy life as a man of wealth and leisure?"

"Not at all. He acted for others, and others, or rather one other, received the bulk proceeds of the clever satchel robbery. This same person received also the $50,000 from the sub-treasury package. The work was done by another of his efficient aids—Miss Vera Tichenor."

"The man who holds the strings in this double looting of the Unity National," continued Marvel, "is Malachi Purvois, banker.

"The head and front of the combination is Purvois," he re-asserted. "This is for private use only, of course, as we want no premature explosion. Now, then, a social end comes into this affair. You know how far I am away from that phase of activity. I have sent for you as an empirical co-efficient. You will cultivate Purvois, you will be invited to some social function, you will meet Miss Tichenor, possibly Ferret, in a new guise, certainly Alison Ransome."

"When you have visited the inner social circle of the tribe Purvois," proceeded Marvel tersely, "report to me. I especially expect a close study and analysis of this Miss Tichenor's eyes. Particularly note how far this foolish, but ingenious young Ransome is infatuated with her. This is all new to you. It will be very old to you in a week, after the mine is exploded."

I left Marvel, feeling somewhat thoughtful. I knew I left him just as he would wish. He had given me a mission to perform, with explanations, if necessary, to come later. I knew his methods so well that I accepted directions and prepared to follow them out.

Now as to Malachi Purvois, this much was interesting to me: he cleared his small private bank through our institution. He was a new-comer in the local financial community, but so precise, prompt and reliable in all his dealings that he had won considerable notice as a coming scalper on the outside of the legitimate banks. Some of his dealings had been large. His balances were not bad, he collateraled everything securely and seemed to have ample capital. So far as I could surmise he was too shrewd and going a man to commit the folly of even knowing a Tod Ferret, or seeking as an intermediary a female bank looter, or having any use for a bank disappointment like Alison Ransome.

I MUST SAY SHE WAS VERY ATTRACTIVE, BUT MORE IN MANNER THAN IN BEAUTY.

But Marvel knew—he always knew. There was a zest in collaborating with that great man, for in the end there was a gratifying blaze of discovery and fruition so far out of the ordinary that it was worth effort and was an enjoyable event to participate in.

It was not difficult to follow out my friend's advice as to cultivating Purvois. He had an eye to business, and a specious professional call from myself, the secretary of his clearing bank, led to a cigar, then to lunch. I made a pretense of wanting his opinion as to some Russo-Siberian bonds. It was natural that Purvois should be familiar with these, for he had originally come, I understood, from a part of the czar's dominions where such as he had been baited and driven from pillar to post for generations. At the end of a week, in a cordial way, he invited me to a small social function at his home.

There was my wedge. Behold me, one evening, in the reception room of a gaudy apartment floor. Everything suggested the ephemeral, just as his banking quarters had—a furnishment easily convertible into cash, readily removed, of light compass and light value, but glaring and impressive in a popular sense. There were some twenty guests present. One was a leading scrap-iron nabob of his class. Another borrowed at the bank on bills receivable discounts. A third was an insurance adjuster for the assured—all men of some means at the tip-top of what was best in the commercial Queer street.

I had a care only, however, for the persons Marvel had named. I did not meet Ferret at all. At the table I sat next to young Ransome. He flushed at the first. Then I fancied I detected a sort of appealing eagerness to be friendly. At his right sat the lady introduced to me as Miss Tichenor.

I must say she was very attractive, but more in manner than in beauty. There was a sinuous, dallying softness to her smile that wrapped about the casual observer invitingly, though to me in a measure warningly. As to those eyes, I saw them not. Until the end of the evening not once did I find the opportunity to meet them, much less to scrutinize closely. She had long lashes and a way of peeping through them sideways, an evasive trick of shifting and concealing their expression. They were black—jet black. I learned that much, but nothing more.

But I made a discovery, an important one, I learned not much later. Purvois had pressed me to remain, intimating business. It was when most of the guests had departed that he took my arm, nodded to Ransome, and we three were soon ensconced in a little bijou of a boudoir, temporarily in use as a smoking room. On top of the lighting of the cigars, in his usual quick business way, Purvois spoke to me promptly:

"You know Ransome?"

"Very well, I am glad to say," I responded, and caught a grateful gleam from the eye of the young man in question.

"He has told me his history," proceeded Purvois. "I do not care to retraverse it, but you of all men, from the same bank where he served, can answer one question finally—he is strictly honest, if unfortunate?"

"I think no one has ever doubted that."

"He has applied to me for the cashiership of my bank," went on Purvois in a rush of words. "I know he is untrained, or rather too quickly trained. It is only a question of plasticity as to my suggestions, and—trustworthiness. I am about to handle large sums as trustee for a Russo-American syndicate. They require heavy bonds, and this young man must qualify for a large surety."

"Any liability company would furnish it, I think," was my reply to this.

What was working, and how far was my candid opinion of the honesty of young Ransome helping the plans of Resilius Marvel? I asked myself as I reached home that night. When I reported to him the next day he did not enlighten me any further than to observe:

"Very good. I see the light, and—the end."

"The end" did not seem to materialize very rapidly. In fact, at the end of the month I began to suspect that somewhere in the skein of mysteries, a strand had knotted, somehow. In the meantime I had received a blank from the Guaranty Indemnity company as one of the references of Alison Ransome, who desired, it was stated, to obtain a $100,000 surety bond as cashier for the banking house of Purvois & Co. I had showed this to Marvel.

"Answer it in the usual way," he directed tersely.

It was five weeks after this, one evening, that Marvel flashed past me on the street with two men whose guarded way of looking forward told me they were in his company with a purpose.

"Tomorrow," he said, simply, in a low tone.

Tomorrow it was—the crisis, though not the final climax. Only a part of my breakfast was complacent. The rest of it, after I had taken up a morning paper, was ruffled and unsatisfactory.

In glaring headlines the print told of an enormous embezzlement—the cashier of the banking house of Purvois & Co. had disappeared two days previous, carrying away with him over $200,000 in cash and securities. No trace of him was suggested. The past record of young Ransome was renewed, at some pains it seemed to me. To the public the incident seemed a fitting climax to the career of a young man who had left another bank "under suspicion of being involved in two inexplicable $50,000 losses"—so runs the world away.

Great unction in behalf of the depleted banker was exercised in stating that no possible loss could accrue to Purvois & Co., nor to their depositors, as the missing cashier had been bonded by the Guaranty Indemnity company for an amount equal to the amount of the defalcation.

I had just reached my room that evening, when a telephone call announced my friend at the other end of the line.

"Come at once to the Cafe Majestic," he said.

He led me three squares away when I had joined him. I noticed that we passed the pretentious gilt and glass plate front of the Purvois banking house. Then, where a court intersected the street just beyond the place, Marvel took the lead toward a gloomy, boarded-up structure that had once been a warehouse.

Four men sprang suddenly into view as Marvel pushed open a door, but drew back as they recognized my guide. Then up two flights of stairs we went and into a lighted room. Its door was as well guarded as below. Again Marvel was in himself a password. As we came into the room I noticed two professional looking men standing near a cot. Upon it, white and motionless, lay Allison Ransome.

I could not control the wave of pity that involuntarily swept over me. The rigid calm of that handsome young face was apparently that of death. Then I knew more, for my friend asked one of the physicians:

"How will it end, doctor?"

"He will live, I think," was the response, made guardedly. "Some depressing narcotic, subtle as the old aqua tofana, has been administered. The purpose seems to have been to reduce mind and body to a permanent condition of lethargy, rather than to produce a distinct toxic effect."

"You have diagnosed it right," assured Marvel. "Within an hour I shall probably know the properties of the medicine."

"That will aid us materially," was the reply.

There seemed to be a great many ramifications to the operations of Resilius Marvel. I was beginning to understand conditions. The alleged embezzlement was a subterfuge on the part of Purvois to secure a new $100,000 from the surety company. The plan was to cause the disappearance of the unsuspecting Ransome until the conspirators were ready to embark with their loot for parts unknown.

I further knew, as Marvel entered another room, that he had discovered the men whose part it was to keep the man denounced as the absconder out of the way. Three men were ranged on a bench along the wall, handcuffed, and three men guarded them. I soon knew, too, that the end one was Tod Ferret. My friend brought a letter from his pocket and extended it with a pencil to this man.

"It's understood that I'm to get the benefit if I sign?" said Ferret.

"You will go free, unfortunately, if Purvois comes to time," replied Marvel. "I promise nothing."

He dispatched a man with the letter. Within half an hour Purvois came into the room. He was pale, breathless, cowed and crushed as Marvel placed him on the rack.

"Your course can be plain or crooked, as you choose," advised my friend. "What I demand is the $100,000 you secured from the bank in your clever raids. The surety company will protect itself. I advise you to close up business and depart for new fields after that. I regret that the policy of the banks is to avoid publicity, or you and your friends would have a long spell of rest from business activities—including my Lady Vitriol."

"Ha!" exclaimed Purvois with a spasmodic jerk of his head—"you know that?"

"She was a bold woman, with her foreign record so well known, to venture into prominence again," said Marvel. "She is waiting for you—after you have settled your bill with the bank."

It was a foregone conclusion that the prime mover in the plot, Purvois, should see his way clear to turn over the $100,000 belonging to the bank. With a knowledge of the action of the drug administered in their possession, the physicians knew how to cope with its deadening effects, and Alison Ransome was soon out of danger.

"You gave me my cue the night you advised me of the intention of Purvois to employ the young man as his cashier," Marvel told me. "I was ready then to spring the trap as to my Lady Vitriol, but I fancied giving them a little more rope might close the net more securely. At her first visit to the bank our Miss Tichenor managed to get possession from the waste paper of a rejected sub-treasury wrapper. On the second occasion she made the substitution. As to the satchel episode, she utilized what she had learned of the bank routine from Ransome, and posted her ally, Ferret."

"Ransome's uncle will be glad to see the affair cleared up," I remarked.

"And a certain young lady with whom Ransome has faltered in his fealty will be glad also," added my friend. "He will find his way back to her, I am sure, a wiser and better man for his severe lesson."

"And Lady Vitriol?" I asked Resilius Marvel the next morning.

The great one drew two thin, vitreous objects from his pocket. They were delicately carved disks, exquisitely constructed and tinted.

"My Lady Vitriol," he enlightened me, "was a famous Berlin beauty five years ago. She got into trouble trying to blind a grand duke or something of that sort out of jealousy. The corrosive vitriol struck her own eyes instead. All she won was banishment, notoriety and the name as I give it to you. It took me a week to account for the missing eyes of blue—another to secure these duplicates of the filmy disguise she now wears."

I looked long and interestedly at the filmy shells. They represented no mean workmanship.

"It must have taken an artist to make these," I submitted.

"Yes, and my Lady Vitriol is a real artist herself in her line, as you have seen," was the reply of Resilius Marvel.

Wanted Her for Himself.

There are some good stories of Anglo-Indian life in Lady Login's newly published volume of Recollections.

One particularly amusing one hinges upon the marriage of her brother, Gen. Charles Campbell, to a Miss Wemyss at Cawnpore.

The bridegroom (writes Lady Login) appeared to take a very languid interest in the ceremony, being very slack in answering the responses.

The Eurasian clerk thereupon took upon himself to prompt him in his part; but when it came to the question "Wilt thou take this woman to be thy wedded wife?" and the zealous official replied for him in a loud nasal chant, "I—I will," General Campbell electrified the congregation by turning round in a towering passion, and shouting at him:

"I'll be hanged if you do, sir!"

The effect, to put it mildly, was decidedly disconcerting to everybody; but, anyway, it put more life into Campbell's participation in the rest of the service.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Life's Emergencies.

In the life of everyone there are times when we are brought face to face with emergencies. Times when we must decide questions that are of vital importance to us and decide them quick.

It is a critical period in life for us, but we can't evade the decision and on that decision may depend the success or failure of our whole life. We are not left to our own judgment entirely in settling life's questions. The Bible shows us how to meet them and gives us examples of how to meet them. By these instances, we are shown the way to meet them with certain success, as well as warned of the evil consequences of a failure to meet them in the right way.

Such an illustration is given in 2 Chron. 20:15. Jehoshaphat was threatened with invasion by a strong combination of surrounding nations who were the enemies of Israel, they would have crushed them. It is interesting to notice what he did not do. To look at the negative side often helps us to see better the positive. In studying his actions in this case we can learn what the best course for us to pursue under similar circumstances. Yet men, for the most part, are very apt to do the opposite of what king Jehoshaphat did.

He did not overestimate the danger. True the danger was great for the enemy could muster three men to his one and that of itself was enough to strike terror to his heart. They were a mighty host. He had a fine army, but it was greatly outnumbered. Nor did he underestimate this danger.

Some men would persuade themselves that by their own powers and might they can conquer any and every foe. They are what we call self-conceited. Well it is good to have a due amount of the commodity called self-conceit. That is you need enough self-confidence to recognize the powers God has given you, and to use your ability to the best advantage. We must do our best, and we can do this, without any of that vain glory or self-assurance that thrusts itself upon others, and by act as well as word says I can do this better than you for I am superior to you.

There was none of that vain, boasting, self confident spirit about this King, but he courageously faced his danger without over or underestimating it.

One thing more we may notice and that is, he did not put undue confidence in his resources and helps. How natural it is to be confident of his resources and if his helps give evidence of special strength he is apt to think he is all right. Well, he may be and again he may not be, for a man's success does not depend altogether in his resources or helps, great as they may be. The King might have said, I have a good army, a well disciplined army, one too that is equal to three or four times as many raw recruits who have no discipline. That may be so but often we fail in our calculations. We may easily overestimate our powers, and ability and rush in where we shall find ourselves weak. Just here is where many a youth makes a serious mistake. He pushes on without proper preparation. Battles are not won without much careful and exacting preparation. He must drill for months; must know the tacties, must endure self denial and hardship before he is ready for the important position.

It is equally true in life. Are we in business? All at once an emergency arises which taxes our energies and puzzles our wits. How shall he met it, with at least a reasonable assurance of success? That's the question that confronts him. He comes to a point in his experience where he cannot go forward, nor can he go back without falling into the hands of enemies or defeat.

There is danger of failure before him, and it looms up with mighty proportions. If he stands still, he is losing ground, and if he tried to retreat gracefully or stealthily it means failure. Many a one has been in just such a predicament, but they have relied on their own resources, made the plunge and met ignominious failure.

Others have drifted hopelessly along with the current, only to be cast up on the banks as mere drift wood, or to be carried by the current into the limbo of forgetfulness. People soon forget failures, whether they be social, financial, political or ecclesiastical.

A man may live years of his life and be considered successful, yet end as an ignominious failure. He may forge his way to the front ranks in the history of his country, his aspirations may lead him in sight of the Presidential chair, or to be a recognized leaded in the halls of Congress, yet by a wrong move, a missdeed or two he may change the current of popular opinion and fall before the execrations of an outraged public whose sense of right, justice and patriotism has been shocken and insulted. He may even find himself expelled from public office when the referendum of public opinion is brought to bear upon him.

He overestimated his own abilities, he underestimated the dangers and put undue confidence in his own resources This, however is only an illustration of what is happening every day in life.

We would commend to all, a careful study of Jehosbaphats example as given in the 20th chapter of second Chronicles.

In our next we shall study what he did do. JOANNES.

LEADING REPUBLICAN LAWYERS DECLARED REFERENDUM ESSENTIAL

MORRIS A. SOPER, Chief Judge Supreme Bench of Baltimore City.
ROBERT F. DUER, Candidate for Judge in First Judicial Circuit.
ALBERT G. TOWERS, Chairman of Public Service Commission.
ROLAND R. MARCHANT, Deputy State's Attorney for Baltimore City.
ADDISON E. MULLIKIN, Former Member City Council.
GALEN L. TAIT, Chairman Republican State Central Committee.

The proposition made by Mayor Preston, that the Legislature may, without the consent of the people in the BELT, take them and their territory into the City of Baltimore, is out of keeping with the American idea of the right of a person to select the government under which he may choose to live, and is as shocking to every person who believes in a Free Government, as the subjugation of Belgium by the Germans.

Notwithstanding this, Mayor Preston has based his campaign for extension of the limits of the City of Baltimore upon the proposition, not that right makes might, but that might makes right. If any man against the consent of the owner, should by force compel a citizen of Baltimore County to move into the City, he would not only be liable to a damage suit, but would probably be sent to Jail; but the City of Baltimore is trying to do this to the residents of the Belt, AND MAYOR PRESTON SAYS IT IS RIGHT.

Now, we say it is neither right nor lawful, and when the Republican Party declared in its Platform that it should be done, it DECLARED AGAINST THE PRINCIPLE OF HOME RULE, SELF-GOVERNMENT, HUMAN FREEDOM, AND ITSELF.

The proposition is as arbitrary as the Kaiser, and as tyrannical as the Unspeakable Turk.

"The importance of the City of Baltimore as the metropolis of Maryland and one of the great American seaports, requires that it receive from the State Government consideration favorable to its development, and we therefore approve of the efforts of the City to include within its limits its harbor and such of its suburbs as are essentially a part thereof; provided, however, that such extension shall not be made EXCEPT WITH THE CONSENT OF THE MAJORITY OF THE QUALIFIED VOTERS IN THE TERRITORY INTENDED TO BE ANNEXED, AS REQUIRED BY THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE, which provides:

"'NOR SHALL THE LINES OF ANY COUNTY BE CHANGED WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF A MAJORITY OF THE LEGAL VOTERS RESIDING WITHIN THE DISTRICT WHICH UNDER SAID PROPOSED CHANGE WOULD FORM A PART OF A COUNTY DIFFERENT FROM THAT TO WHICH IT BELONGED PRIOR TO THE SAID CHANGE.'"

The Sun of September 24th, 1915, said:

"An unequivocal declaration on the annexation question will be made by the Republican Convention at its session today in Ford's Opera House.

"The platform builders met early in the evening and were in continuous session until the morning. Among those who worked on the tentative draft of the platform were Chief Judge Morris A. Soper, John B. Hanna, (then Republican State Chairman), Messrs. Weller (then running for Governor), Duer and Doub, the State Candidates; Albert G. Towers, Chairman of the Public Service Commission, Fred H. Zihlman (Congressman from the Sixth Maryland District), Addison E. Mullikin, William P. Jackson (former United States Senator), Walter B. Miller, William F. Stone, (late Republican City leader), Thomas L. Bartlett, Frank S. Williams (State Senator), Thomas Parran (Republican leader of Calvert County), Galen L. Tait, D. Lindley Sloan and Dr. Joseph I. France" (now United States Senator).

It is said that this plank was so important that Judge Soper was called from the retirement of his home for consultation, notwithstanding he was then a candidate for election; and that the subject matter of this plank WAS JUDGE SOPER'S DELIBERATE CONCLUSION OF LAW, and its phraseology was his, AND THE ORIGINAL DRAFT WAS IN HIS HANDWRITING.

This being so, this plank must be considered Judge Soper's judicial opinion upon the method of extension of municipal limits PROVIDED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

This year Mayor Preston and the Republican Party declare against this same HONEST AND CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITION, AND OVERRULE JUDGE SOPER, AND ASK THE DEMOCRACY OF BALTIMORE TO BETRAY THE PARTY WHEN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY IS RIGHT AND MAYOR PRESTON AND THE REPUBLICAN PARTY ARE WRONG.

It is not conceivable that these Republican lawyers have changed their legal opinions on the Constitution since 1915; therefore, is it not clear that the complete change in the Republican Party platform by the politicians this year is one of political expediency, and contrary to the deliberate legal conclusions of many of the ablest minds in the party?

GRANTSVILLE.

Grantsville carried off the honors at the Oakland Fair last week in a manner to be proud of. The Girls Canning Club received a prize of $12 for their exhibits in fruit and vegetables, and a number of ladies and girls were individual prize winners in the preserving and fancy work departments.

The girls who were fortunate in being prize winners in canned goods were: Alverta Miller, Nina Younkin, Helen, Althea and Esther Engle, Helen Stanton, Margaret Getty and probably some whose names were not obtained. Mrs. J. O. Getty was awarded a premium on a jar of cherries. Miss Alberta Miller, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Miller, of Stone House Farm, received a special premium upon her productions, she having won premiums on over a dozen varieties. Miss Miller is but twelve years old, and has canned nearly two hundred quarts of fruits and vegetables herself. It is needless to say that Alberta walked on air when she heard the news, and all the girls were delighted to find, upon entering the Fair grounds, Friday, that most of their jars were decorated with labels and tags bearing the inscription "First Premium." Not all the girls competed, or there would undoubtedly have been more premiums, as they have all done good work this summer. They made the trip with the entire school, on Friday, in J. J. Bender's big motor truck.

The ladies who were awarded prizes for fancy work were Miss Carrie Dorsey, Miss Mary Blocher, each a first premium; Miss Christine Winterberg, first premium; Miss Maud Bevans, Miss Ethel Broadwater, Mrs. J. U. Stanton, Mrs. Irene Hayes, each a second premium.

The weather was delightful and the Fair was voted a success from beginning to finish by all who attended.

F. Wieman, coal promoter, who has been operating extensively in these parts all summer, gave his employees a treat last Thursday night, by entertaining them with an oyster roast, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Patton, near Grantsville. The guests were William Baker, H. A. Patton, Bruce Bender, Albert Bowman, Milton Younkin, Norman Patton, James Schaefer, Ed. Butler, and C. A. Bender of the National Hotel. The oysters, with their accompanying delicacies, were prepared by Mrs. Patton and daughter, Mrs. Norman Patton, which alone is proof positive of the merits of the feast. The summer house was the scene of the jolly festivities which Mr. Wieman enjoyed as much as did his men.

Rev. E. E. Oney preached a very inspiring sermon on Sunday, the third of a series upon the Reformation. He also made an appeal for the Loysville Orphans' Home, which is building a dormitory, and which wishes the Lutheran people to send any fruit and vegetables that can be spared, to the Home. Rev. Oney has asked that a Harvest Home service be held on Sunday, October 21, and all vegetables, canned goods, etc., that will be brought to the church during the week previous to be used in decorating, shall, on Monday following, be shipped to the Home at Loysville, Pa. If any members or interested persons, who were not present Sunday to hear of this, will prepare their donations, and bring them to the church, they will be attended to by a committee in charge.

Almost the entire school, chaperoned by Miss Browning and Miss Crowe, attended the Oakland Fair on Friday. Others who attended during the week were Mrs. Eva Bevans, Mrs. M. Nathan, Misses Gertrude Hone, Mollie and Carrie Dorsey, Maude Bevans, Vilda Gingerich, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Getty, Allan Bender, W. T. Stanton and family, Peter Yost and family, H. P. Miller and family, Mrs. W. C. Loechel, Hayward Broadwater, L. H. and George Diefenbach, and many others from this vicinity.

Nevin Broadwater and George Diefenbach left this week for training camps, the former to Camp Meade and the latter returning to Jeannette, Pa., and going from there to Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., with other boys from Jeannette. The boys at Camp Meade have written home in the best of spirits and like camp life. They are asking for a Victrola to enliven the tedium of the evenings, money for which is being raised in the county.

Rev. and Mrs. C. J. Price have been in Fairmont, W. Va., where the former attended the M. E. Conference last week. Their daughter, Miss Jeanette, has been keeping house and visiting around among her girl friends during their absence.

Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Keller have returned from a two weeks' trip in the west.

Miss Marie Connor was confined to her bed with a severe cold for a few days.

Ed. J. Fisher and family have moved from Grantsville to a house upon the farm of his brother-in-law, J. C. Swauger, about two miles from town.

Miss Ethel Broadwater spent last week in Cumberland.

The Hunt Family Circus gave an exhibition in Grantsville on Saturday night, the attractions being monkeys, ponies, acrobats, the "wonderful human half-lady," and a chimpanzee. The attendance was small. The tent was pitched in the Casselman orchard.

Misses Lulu and Tibbetts Shaw, and brother, Guerney, were Meyersdale visitors last Wednesday.

Mrs. C. S. Zeller entertained the Fortnighly Club on Thursday afternoon. A most appetizing luncheon was served at the close of the meeting which was spent in sewing.

J. J. Bender and family, C. A. Bender and family, and Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Schaefer attended the funeral of Daniel Lohr at Springs, Pa., on Friday.

Dr. and Mrs. Bruce Lichty and daughter, Hilda, and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Moore, from Meyersdale, and Madison Willis, of Washington Court House, Ohio, were dinner guests of Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Keller, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Smouse, of Cumberland, were guests of Mrs. Marion Broadwater last Sunday.

Mrs. George Younkin and daughter, Eleanor, spent Thursday with the former's father, Jacob Becket, of Coye, Md.

A Great Increase Of Food Supply For 1918.

WHEN we consider that 61 per cent. of the whole population of this Country lives in cities, we can understand the need of an increase in food products, which come chiefly from the farms. It is an urgent call. It is a call upon the patriotism of every farmer, farm hand and land owner. Every acre should produce its quoto of food products. The time,to plan for this result is at hand. No delay can be allowed. Plant big acreage. Plan for a big yield. Work for a bumper crop. Prices will be good. The Country's need is the farmer's opportunity.

William H. Swauger, et. al., vs. Sarah Golding et. al.
No. 2142 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is for the purpose of obtaining a decree for the sale of the real estate of Martha A. Swauger, late of Garrett county, deceased, and a distribution of the proceeds amongst the parties entitled to interest therein.

The Bill states that Martha A. Swauger departed this life May 2nd, 1917, inestate, possesed of a farm of 110 acres, located in said Garrett county, and left surviving her a husband, William H. Swauger and the following children, viz: William F. Swauger, George E. The said George K., Sarah, Mary, Charles, Ella and Lewis, being non-residents of the State of Maryland, and the said William H. Swauger, William F., Elizabeth, Albert and Joseph being residents of Maryland.

The Bill then states that the land is not susceptible of partition amongst the parties without loss and injury, and that it will be necessary to make sale of same in order to divide it.

The Bill then prays for a decree for sale of said property, and that the proceeds of same be divided and for general relief, and also prays for an order of publication against non-residents defendants and for subpoena against the resident defendants.

It is thereupon, this 10th day of October, 1917, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 16th day of November, 1917, give notice to Sarah Golding and George Golding, her husband, Mary Williams and Madison Williams, her husband, Charles Swauger and Tillie Swauger, his wife, Ella Beelman and Edward Beelman, her husband, Lewis Swauger and Mabel Swauger, his wife, all of whom are non residents of the State of Maryland, and all of whom are of full age, of the object and substance of this Bill, and warning them to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 3d day of December next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed; or in lieu of said order of publication, the plaintiffs are authorized to give notice to the said non-residents defendants by personal service of this order and return thereof as provided by the laws of the State of Maryland.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 42. OAKLAND, MARYLAND THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1917. NUMBER 35

HE WITHDREW HIS CANDIDACY

Mr. T. W. Casteel Will Not Make Campaign for Commissioner.

On Saturday night Mr. T. W. Casteel, one of the sterling farmers of this community, who is a splendid citizen and also a heavy taxpayer, filed with Mr. J. M. Stanton, president of the Board of Supervisors of Elections, papers nominating him as an independent candidate for the office of County Commissioner.

The petition placed in the hands of the official contained more than a sufficient number to have Mr. Casteel's name placed upon the ballot, but owing to certain irregularities which were apparent upon the face of two of the sheets containing the names of the petitioners, Mr. Casteel thought it best to withdraw the petition at a meeting of the Supervisors on Monday, which he did voluntarily, although he was assured by all members of the board that so far as they were concerned the name of Mr. Casteel would be placed upon the ballot if he so desired and allow the petition to remain as a file in the office of the board.

At the meeting on Monday John Shartzer also presentod a petition to have his name placed upon the ballot as an independent candidate for House of Delegates, stating at the time that he was well aware that the time for filing such papers expired on Saturday. One member of the board expressed himself that the petitioner knowing it was unlawful for the Board to accept the papers Shartzer was presumptuous in presenting them. The petitioner then withdrew from the board room, taking his papers with him.

THEATRE TAX

Patrons Must Dig Up One Penny for Each Admission.

Beginning on Thursday, November 1st, every admission to a theatre in the United States is taxed in addition to the regular entrance fee charged by the management. Thus, if the admission is a dime, the applicant must pay 11 cents; if 15 cents, then 17 cents must be paid; while on a 25-cent ticket the tax is three cents additional. And it does not stop here. As a general rule newspaper men and many others enjoy the privilege of free admission to show houses. This class must also pay the tax on a graduated scale as outlined above.

So don't forget, you patrons of the theatre, that beginning on next Thursday, have the necessary additional change about your person, otherwise you may not be permitted to enter.

GARRETT'S BOYS IN CAMP GORDON

An Interesting Letter From Four of Them Now Stationed There

The Republican was in receipt of the following letter yesterday afternoon from four of Garrett county's soldiers who were recently sent to Camp Gordon near Atlanta from Camp Meade, near Washington, D. C.; and it is with a great deal of pleasure that we give the communication space in our columns.

Co. B, 325th Infantry,
Camp Gordon, Ga.
Oct. 20, 1917.

Dear Garrett county friends:

We thought our friends would be glad to hear from us through the Republican.

All but about twenty of the Garrett county boys that were sent to Camp Meade in the first two divisions of the quota left Camp Meade last Tuesday morning enroute to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

We came by way of Washington, Richmond, Augusta and Atlanta. Everyone enjoyed the trip very much but were very tired when we landed here Wednesday evening.

When we left the train we were taken into the large Y. M. C. A. auditorium and an orchestra was playing "Maryland my Maryland." You can imagine the applause that was given. An opera followed but we were too hungry to enjoy it much.

After the opera we were assigned to different divisions and taken to our barracks. We had our evening mess about ten o'clock. Our crowd was distributed throughout the camp and we have some in all divisions of the army.

This camp has things much more convenient than Camp Meade. We have hot and cold shower baths and plenty of good fire. We also have plenty of good well seasoned food here. Ask the boys at Camp Meade if they have that. We are only about thirteen miles from Atlanta and the street car, train and bus service is good. There is also a small town about one-half mile from our barricks. There are two good vaudiville shows there. They have plays in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights of each week.

We have located about all the boys now. They seem well satisfied excepting the idea of being so far away from home.

It is rather warm here today but last night it was very chilly. One fellow just told us that they have some snow here in the winter.

We haven't done much drilling here yet but they surely believe in taking long hikes. We hiked about fifteen miles yesterday morning. We had a five minute rest every hour so we didn't mind it much. They tell us that we have two such hikes every week so I guess we'll get used to it.

We will surely be glad to hear from any of our friends.

Sunday dinner is over and we cannot close until we add the menu of the meal. It consisted of chicken, dressing, potatoes, beans, rice, ice cream, cake and bread.

Yours respectfully,
CLYDE V. KNAPP,
A. D. SCHELL,
ERNEST GORTNER,
EARL WILLETT.

In Honor of Her Father.

Mrs. J. C. Kendall, of near town, gave a dinner party Tuesday evening in honor of her fater, Dr. A. J. Mason, of Friendsville, this county. Covers were laid for eight. Those who partook of Mrs. Kendall's hospitality were, in addition to the honor guest and Mr. Kendall, Mr. Harry J. Black, R. M. Holman, C. V. Guard, all of Friendsville; Rev. W. M. Shultz, Mr. J. C. Renninger and Mr. Benj. H. Sincell, all of Oakland. The dinner was elaborate and the evening highly enjoyed by those present.

COUNTY'S LONE NEGRO SOLDIER

Will Go To Camp Meade Monday Night From Oakland.

Garrett county has furnished, thus far her full quota of white soldiers and on Monday night her quota of colored soldiers, one lone man, will leave on train No. 4 for Camp Meade, Md., there to join a negro regiment now forming.

The colored trooper to join the colors is William Arthur Williams, son of John Williams, of Deer Park, a farmer who came to Maryland many years ago from the Dominion of Canada, where he has established a home and is considered one of the most progressive farmer citizens of the county. His son came under the selective draft law and as a law-abiding resident of the State he responded willingly and now goes to fight the battle of Liberty for the world.

He will be furnished the same outfit by the Red Cross and other societies as were the white soldiers going from the county.

Resolution of Respect.

WHEREAS, The Almighty God has seen fit to remove from among us our beloved sister, Mrs. Mollie Holman, and

WHEREAS, By her virtues and social qualities and by her upright life, and good council amongst us, we have lost a faithful worker and esteemed friend and sister, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, Pride of Friendsvilin Rebekah Lodge, No. 37, bear willing testimony of our great esteem for her, and her work for our order, and that by her death our order has lost a true and willing and noble defender; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the county paper and to the family of the deceased, and also be spread on the minutes of our order.

NAVAL BASE COMPLETED

Better Conditions Await Maryland Volunteers In Navy

With the completion of the new naval base and training station on the site of the Jamestown Exposition, a handicap on recruiting for the United States Navy has been removed. Ample accommodations for recruits are now afforded and the 10-a-week limit on stations of the Eastern Division has been removed.

The recruiting authorities of the Maryland District call special attention to the need of apprentice seamen, and point out the unusual opportunities for advancement. Young men enlisting in the Navy in this rating can soon promote themselves to the best ratings of the service.

Chaplain Duffin of the Atlantic Fleet visited the Maryland Recruiting Station a few days ago and was loud in his praise of the type of young men going into the Navy from this State. He reported that the Maryland boys were well pleased with the treatment they are receiving.

Lieut. M. A. Leahy, Officer-in-Charge of the Maryland District, hopes to be able to make a good showing in the number of recruits during the next several months.

Married.

RINGLER—RINGER—William Franklin Ringler and Sophia Catherine Ringer, both of Confluence, Pa., were united in marriage on Monday afternoon, at the Lutheran parsonaga by Rev. S. E. Wicker.

LOST—A gold watch, made by Armiger, Baltimore; engraved on back "H. B. H." Finder will be liberally rewarded by returning same to G. Semmes Hamill, Oakland.—Adv.

AUTUMN THE HOME SEASON

Summer's the time for wanderlust—and autumn's the time for home.

When the first cool, rainy days of September vacationists feel a lagging interest in the lures of the gypsy trail and turn their steps away from mountain and forest and seaside to the fireside joys.

Mother Nature herself gave them the hint by drawing about her beauties the first sleepy veils of haze; by carpeting the woods with thick beds of leaves for her forest children; by setting her squirrels at nut conservation, and gathering her birds for noisy conferences before their southern journey. Mother Nature wants her annual nap, so she yawns and drowses before her summer guests with her frank suggestions that it is time for them to go home.

And when the gusts of frosty October nights scurry the brown leaves up and down the quiet streets of the town we draw the shades, trim the lamp to a warm glow, light the crackling fire and—settle into the very heart of home.

How good it is to be at home—at home with the people who mean all the world to us, and where even the chairs and tables, lamp and fire, familiar possessions that are mere things to others, are to us the symbol of the labor spent to gather them in this charmed circle of home.

Now's the time for books, for friendships, for the flowering of all the sweet intimacies of family life and the heaping up of eternal treasures of love and memory.

Winter and spring and summer are very good, but with autumn we find the fruits of the whole year heaped together upon a single altar—the hearth fire altar of home.

THE NEW DRAFT CLASSES.

Ranged into five grand divisions the men of the selected draft will be able to discover their classification and the order of their probable call into the active service. By a study of the five groups in detail the men under the draft will come to know the principles underlying the arrangement and the bearing upon themselves in their individual cases.

Some who have flagged in the matter of provision for their families will be stimulated to greater industry through the hints contained in this classification. The new scheme is to do away with the objections made to the decisions of the local boards. The full facts of service and exemption are set forth and anyone may discover the probability of his early or later service or exception from service.

The new scheme is a fair one and one that is readily understandable by anyone who reads the items carefully. The saving in examinations of cases will be a great gain. There will be no medical examination of the men as a whole, but only of those who have not been exempted by the conditions set forth in the new scheme. The men of the draft will now be upon notice. The new scheme has many objections. But these are less than those that were found in the former and complicated numerical system. It seeks at least to establish a rational order of call.

MEN TO BE DIVIDED INTO FIVE GROUPS

Nine Million Registered Under Draft Law to Be Classified.

Division of the remaining 9,000,000 selective service men of the country into five classes will be done according to classification contained in the table which follows. LIBERTY BOND MEETINGS HELD

Those at Friendsville, Grantsville and Crellin Show Good Results.

About one hundred and fifty persons, including some of the school children, assembled in the school building in Friendsville on Monday, the 24, to show their patriotism and do what they could towards the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

Mr. E. A. Browning was chosen chairman of the meeting, and Mr. W. F. East, secretary. There had been some misunderstanding regarding the time of the meeting, as one of the county papers had advertised the meeting for Tuesday night and some of the persons who would have subscribed for bonds did so after the meeting.

Capt. R. Fuller Shryock had come to Oakland from Pocomoke City to address these Liberty Bonds meetings and his address was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

The First National Bank was unable to announce their subscription as there had been no meeting of their Board but the following subscriptions were placed after the meeting.

The meeting at Grantsville was one of the most enthusiastic during the campaign, notwithstanding the snow storm that came after the rain in the afternoon.

This meeting was also held in the school building, and Dr. Keller acted as chairman and Mr. Baker as secretary.

The High School girls led the singing here, and were joined by both the Boy and Girl Scouts.

Mr. R. E. Sliger, chairman of the county, was the first speaker, and after going over the causes of the present world war, and why it was so necessary to buy a Liberty Bond to help win the war, explained the financial side of this loan. He was followed by Rev. U. S. Wright, who not only made an excellent address, but also a touching appeal for funds to carry on the war.

At Crellin last night one of the most enthusiastic meetings of the entire Liberty Bond campaign was conducted by Mr. R. E. Sliger and Rev. Dr. Wright. The meeting was held in the Union church which had been beautifully decorated for the occasion. Splendid music was furnished by a male quartet and the choir of the church. Crellin did herself proud and probably heads every town in the county insofar as subscriptions go, having subscribed $10,000 for the bonds. The town has a population of a few hundred only; every man works and the funds for the bonds will come from their daily earnings. The subscriptions made are as follows:

Mr. Farmer, Listen!

During the Fair we will sell you Farm Machinery (such as we have a good stock of) for less than the market price today.

We have the assurance that machinery of all kinds will be very much higher in price for 1918 than present prices, owing to the high price of steel and labor.

Machinery as yet has not advanced in proportion to the price of steel that enters into the making of same.

We have a good stock of Mowers, Rakes, Tedders, Grain Drills, Manure Spreaders, (wide spread) a few Olive Plows and a nice stock of Wagons on hand.

We will give next year's terms on Harvesting Machinery. We think we are safe in saying that Binders will be $200, Mowers $75 or $80, Rakes $40, and all other machinery in proportion for 1918.

Whether you buy of us or not our advice is to get your machinery for next year now.

An example of the high earnings unskilled coal mine workers of the Fairmont district are now receiving was cited today in the case of Tony Potcosh, a Rumanian, employed at the Grant Town mining plant of the New England Fuel and Transportation Company. During a two weeks' period this month he earned $103.60. These wages, it is said, represent the average earnings of unskilled labor at that mining plant. The coal is mined, drilled and shot by company labor and men like Tony are employed to shovel it into the cars.

EXTENSION ON FAIR TERMS--NOT POSSIBLE WITH REFERENDUM

The territory annexed to the city will get city conveniences which it does not now enjoy; better police protection; better fire protection; better health protection; pure filtered water from the city's supply; better street lighting; the right to connect with the city sewerage system; systematic garbage collection; systematic street and harbor supervision for the development of the property to better advantage; the right to send their children free to the Baltimore City College, Polytechnic Institute and High Schools.

City conveniences cannot be furnished for county taxes by Baltimore any more than they can by Frederick, Hagerstown, Cumberland, Cambridge, Salisbury, Annapolis, or any other city. In every city in the State people pay more than county taxes for city conveniences. The combined city and county tax in some of the principal cities is as follows: Annapolis $1.93; Cambridge $1.85; Chestertown $1.94; Cumberland $2.27; Easton $1.84; Frederick $2.15; Hagerstown $1.76; Laurel $2.34; Oakland $1.98; Ocean City $2.30; Rockville $2.42; Salisbury $1.98. The rate in Baltimore is $1.98.

Putting the belt into the city and furnishing it with city conveniences means that the people will have to pay more taxes than they are now paying, if they pay for what they get; if you insert a referendum a majority of the people will not vote to pay more taxes, even though they know they will get additional benefits therefore, although, after they once enjoy the city benefits they are willing to pay the additional taxes needed to provide them, as is proved by the fact that in all the cities of the State the people pay more than county taxes, and yet no city has ever asked to have its Charter repealed and the city turned back under the county commissioners.

The Legislature has more than one hundred times passed Acts incorporating and extending the limits of Baltimore and other cities in the State, thus putting people under city government and city taxes, without any referendum.

The Legislature of 1914 and 1916 passed many such Acts.

LEGISLATURE OF 1914.

By Chapter 93, the limits of Frederick City were extended and people in the annexed territory subjected to a city tax rate of $1.10 in addition to the county tax rate; by Chapter 257, the limits of Hagerstown were extended, and the people of the annexed area subjected to the full city rate gradually that is: one-tenth of the full rate each year until they become subject to the full rate the tenth year; by Chapter 155 the limits of Annapolis were extended, and the people in the new territory subjected to the city rate of 95 cents in addition to the county rate; by Chapter 63 Oakland was given the power to extend its own limits, whenever it thought proper, by ordinance, and to subject the people thus brought in to the city rate of 70 cents in addition to the county rate; by Chapter 116, the limits of Kensington were extended, and the people in the new territory subjected to the city rate of 50 cents in addition to the county rate.

LEGISLATURE OF 1916.

By Chapter 249 extended the limits of Queenstown; by Chapter 266 extended the limits of Bladensburg; by Chapter 615 extended the limits of Easton.

The preamble to this Act shows that the people of Easton voted in favor of an extension, but the people in the territory annexed were not given any vote on the subject.

TRIED A REFERENDUM TWICE.

In Daly vs. Morgan, 69 Md. 465, the Court of Appeals said:

"No one knows better than the framers of the Constitution of 1867 that the time must come, and that not far distant, when the extension of the limits of a great city like Baltimore would be absolutely necessary to its proper growth and development."

Seven years after the Constitutional Convention, the Legislature passed an Act extending the limits of Baltimore City, Act of 1874, Chapter 224, but made the mistake of inserting a referendum to the voters in the territory to be annexed, and they voted against the extension; thus the extension which the Court of Appeals said was "absolutely necessary" for the growth and development of the city was set back for fourteen years.

In 1888, the Legislature made another effort to extend the city limits. In the effort to get some extension, they provided for a referendum in three sections; the eastern section, which was the most densely populated and which most needed the protection of the city police and health department, fire department, etc., voted to stay out, hence the extension obtained was not symmetrical. Moreover, in order to get even a part of the surrounding territory to vote to come in, terms were put in the Bill which were unfair to the people in the old city limits.

The Baltimore County Committee, which is fighting city extension, in a three-column advertisement inserted in all the daily papers of Baltimore, at a cost of more than a thousand dollars, stated:

"The Annex of 1888 has been a heavy burden on the old city * * * And, in a headline, referred to "the city taxpayers still groaning under the burden of supporting the annex of 1888, which has cost the city $15,000,000 more than it has paid in."

This statement is rather wild, like other statements emanating from that Committee, but it is a fact that the terms of the Act of 1888 were unfair to the city, and the city has had to spend more money in the Annex than it has collected in taxes from the Annex.

The fair thing is for the new territory to pay for benefits received. The city ought not to make any profit from taxing the new territory, and the new territory ought not to get conveniences and benefits at a loss or expense to the old city.

The experience of every city in the State proves that you cannot have city conveniences for county taxes,---that you must pay some additional taxes for city benefits; and the experience with the Acts of 1874 and 1888 proves that you cannot have annexation on fair terms if you make it conditional upon a referendum to the people in the territory to be annexed. You cannot expect a fair decision of any question if you give to one of the parties interested the power to decide it. The only way to get fair annexation is to let the Legislature decide the terms. This is what the State has done for every other city in the State; why should it not do the same thing for Baltimore?

HAS BEEN DONE FOR BALTIMORE.

In the history of Baltimore, the Legislature has ten times extended its limits without a referendum, —the last being by Act of 1816, Chapter 209. Referring to this Act, the SUN Almanac of 1900 says:

> "Sixteen thousand or seventeen thousand inhabitants were added to the poulation by Act of the Legislature and against the protest of a large majority of the people of both the city and the county."

The Act of 1816 not only extend the limits of the city without any referendum either to the city or to the people in the territory to be annexed, but made a great extension. It extended the limits to North avenue on the north, the present eastern and southern limits on the east and south, and what is now Payson street on the west, taking in thousands of acres of forests and farm lands. It annexed territory ten times as large as the territory in the old city limits. The Legislature of 1816 had a vision of a Greater Baltimore which was soon realized. By 1820 Baltimore had nearly caught Philadelphia, by 1830 had passed Philadelphia and become the second city in the United States, with a population of 80,620 against 26,514 in 1800; or nearly trebled in twenty years. Why should the people of Maryland in 1917 be less proud of their chief city, or have less faith in the future, than the Legislature of 1816? It will take less faith in the future than was shown by the Legislature of 1816 for the Legislature 1918 to vision Baltimore a city of a million population, paying nearly twice as much revenue to the State government as now, and with the great increase in the value of farm lands and farm properties throughout the State which will come from nearness to that city of a million people.

PROHIBITION CANDIDATE FOR COMPTROLLER.

WILLIAM MAGEE.

TO THE FRIENDS OF PROHIBITION.

The present status of the Prohibition Movement is such that it demands the critical thought and the utmost diligence of its friends.

To accept recent events as a sentiment for victory.

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS THERE HAS BEEN PROHIBITION SENTIMENT ENOUGH IN THE UNITED STATES TO SECURE NATIONAL PROHIBITION AT ANY GENERAL NATIONAL ELECTION, IF UNITED, yet the Liquor Traffic is still entrenched in our national politics, with sufficient power to dominate the policies of both the great political parties, even as against the powerful friends of Prohibition within said parties.

The Senate has organized the submission of the Prohibition Amendment, NOT THROUGH FRIENDSHIP FOR PROHIBITION, but in order to shift the responsibility from itself to the States, and temporarily rid itself of a troublesome question, while at the same time it saddled the Amendment Proposition with a questionable six year limitation clause, probably intended to becloud the whole issue and furnish the liquor forces something with which to stage a contest.

The House of Representatives may or may not ratify the action of the Senate.

Suppose it does, what then?

To secure the ratification by the requisite number of States will require herculean efforts. You cannot assume that the legislatures of "dry" States—many of which are strongly for States Rights—will ratify the national Amendment, and even if they did it would still require the assent of a number of "wet" States and it would be easy for the Liquor Interests to concentrate their corrupting millions on the last two or three or even one necessary state, and thereby defeat the whole proposition.

WHAT THEN?

Suppose that in the meantime you have—in your zeal for the amendment proposition—neglected and destroyed the Prohibition Party which will then be more urgently needed than ever before, will you not have wasted the most vital force incident to the Prohibition Movement:

Can you afford to lose the Prohibition Party?

THE PARTY IN MARYLAND WILL LOSE ITS PLACE UPON THE OFFICIAL BALLOT UNLESS ITS CANDIDATE RECEIVES ONE PER CENT OF THE TOTAL VOTE CAST THIS FALL. Do you who stand for good citizenship want this to happen?

There are three candidates for the Comptrollership. All three are personally worthy and well qualified for the position.

BUT ONLY ONE OF THEM STANDS UPON A PLATFORM WHICH DECLARES FOR PROHIBITION, AND THAT ONE IS WILLIAM MAGEE, THE PROHIBITION CANDIDATE OF THE ONLY "DRY" PARTY IN MARYLAND. A VOTE FOR HIM IS A PUBLIC DECLARATION FOR PROHIBITION AND WILL HELP THE PARTY TO MAINTAIN ITS LEGAL EXISTENCE, AND BE AVAILABLE FOR CONTINUED USEFULNESS.

VOTE FOR WILLIAM MAGEE.

SAY CITY IS UNFAIR

COUNTY MEN INSIST REFERENDUM SHOULD BE GIVEN.

Claim People of State do Not All Understand That Baltimore County is Not Fighting Annexation if Presented In a Just Bill.

(Prepared by the Baltimore County Non-Partisan Citizens' Protective Committee.)

The Baltimore county people claim that the people of the other counties would be with them solidly, without regard to party, if they fully understood the attitude of Baltimore county in the annexation fight. They are not opposing a fair bill, if it submits the question to a vote of the people proposed to be taken into the city.

The point of disagreement is upon the bill prepared by City Solicitor Field, given the approval of a committee named by the city and now called the Greater Baltimore Extension League bill. No representative of the section affected by the bill was given any chance to make any changes in this bill, which omits the command of the Constitution of Maryland that no part of any county may be taken away without the consent, by vote, of the people living in the territory proposed to be taken away.

This bill, prepared entirely by representatives of the city, contains many other provisions which the Baltimore county people term oppressive and unfair, but the city men who are pushing it insist that it must be passed just as it is. They demanded that both political parties, at their recent State conventions, should declare in favor of it. The Democratic Convention declined to do this, but declared its approval of a fair bill which would submit the matter to the people, as provided by the Constitution. The Republican Convention declared in favor of the bill as it is, without a referendum.

This action of the Republican party, it is urged by the Baltimore county men, has placed some of the office-holders and candidates of that party in a queer position. There are several hold-over Republican State Senators who were elected on the Republican platform of 1915, which, upon the advice of Republicans of undoubted legal ability, declared flatly in favor of the referendum. These Senators claim that, in all honor, they are bound by the promise made to the voters on their behalf when they were elected. Notable among these is Senator Newton D. R. Allen, of Baltimore county, who was elected in the face of a normal Democratic majority of about 2,000. Unquestionably, as the political writers of that time asserted, much of this great change was due to the fact that the Democratic platform of 1915 was ambiguous and straddling upon the question of annexation.

Other Republicans, who were elected to the House of Delegates two years ago, are candidates for re-election. Since their renomination their party has made for them a promise directly the reverse of that of 1915. Still others, new men, are supposed to be bound by the platform of this year, which declares flatly against the referendum. Thus, it is asserted, if the Republicans win a majority in the Legislature they will be represented by members pledged on both sides of the same question and some who will not know "where they are at."

The advocates of the city's bill have adopted as their campaign cry, "A referendum means no annexation." This, of course, means that they assume that the people of the suburbs will reject the proposed bill if it is submitted to them. It is contended by their opponents that this is not a fair assumption, because when, in 1888, a fair annexation bill was proposed it was passed by the Legislature with but little opposition and the voters in the northern and western suburbs approved it and their territory was taken into the city. The opponents of the present plan of annexation claim that the refusal of its sponsors to submit it to the people is an admission that it is unfair, and that the omission of the referendum makes it more so.

Mayor Preston, it is asserted, has endeavored to make it appear that the residents of the territory which he proposes to take in are persons who have left the city to escape taxation and therefore, as he claims, not entitled to any sympathy. This, the county people insist, is not at all correct. Some of the residents, they say, have always lived where they do now, while many others have moved to that section from other parts of Baltimore county, from other counties and from other states. These are mostly people who have always lived in the country and prefer the suburbs to the more cramped quarters they would have to occupy in the built-up portions of the city.

Good Hunting in City.

It is alleged by Baltimore county men who are opposing annexation that much of the vacant land in the present city affords good gunning. Mr. Augustus Hartman, who moved from the Tenth District of Baltimore county into the city a number of years ago, takes great pride in showing the lists of game he has killed without ever going outside the city limits. No license is required for gunning in the city.

CITY SEEKING POWER

Plea For "Room to Grow" Termed Subterfuge

Opponents Claim Suburbs Are Enjoying Cheap County Form Of Government, Which Should Not Be Taken From Them Without Their Consent.

(Prepared by the Baltimore County Non-Partisan Citizens' Protective Committee.)

What is a city?

Many persons believe that it is a large collection of people and houses, with streets, railroad terminals, trolley cars, street lighting and other facilities for business and comfort. Others seem to think that a city consists of a mayor and city council, a multitude of other office holders, a bonded debt, high taxes, minor privileges and similar things which are characteristic of municipal governments. The opponents of annexation urge that the actual city is not necessarily the same in extent as the political city, and may grow at liberty, regardless of the boundaries of the latter.

Baltimore, they urge, in its true sense, and as it is known to business men elsewhere, consists of the whole big settlement located about the navigable portion of the Patapsco river. Part of it is under the control of a mayor and city council and has the other municipal features mentioned above, the remainder is under the governments of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties. The residents of each section, it is asserted, are satisfied with their present form of government.

Governments For the People.

The settlements came first; the county and city governments came afterward to facilitate the business, safety, comfort and pleasure of the settlers. The governments were created for the people, not the people for the governments.

Lack of proper consideration of this fact, it is claimed, causes some persons unwittingly to fall in with the scheme to extend the political boundaries of Baltimore. These boundaries were set to define the section over which the people residing therein wished the city government to have control of their public affairs. The city officials, it is urged, have no inherent right to extend their sway over people without their consent. It is a fundamental maxim of law that all government should be by and with the consent of the governed.

The county people allege that the cry that "Baltimore must have room to grow" is a subterfuge. They insist that the city, in its real sense of a large collection of people, with all their paraphernalia of business and pleasure, is growing all the time—much faster than if it were all controlled by the Mayor and City Council. Within the past few years, owing to a great expansion in manufacturing, the rate of increase in population and property values in the suburban sections has been very rapid.

No Factories In Annex Of 1888.

The annexationists claim that this influx of big business would have come just the same, even if the city had controlled all the territory in which these factories are located. The answer of their opponents is that the city now has thousands of acres of vacant land in the Annex of 1888, and not one factory of any consequence has been located there. On the contrary, they say, there are many instances where large plants have been located just across the line—in the counties—and purposely, to be beyond the jurisdiction of the city government.

County Government Cheaper.

The counties have the commission form of government, which is cheaper than that of the city. The salary roll of office holders of the city was $1,219,392.11 in 1915, the last year for which a published City Comptroller's report is available, according to statements of the anti-annexationists, who point out that the corresponding pay roll for Baltimore county was $108,973.74. The tax rate of Baltimore county this year is $1.06, while that of the city is $1.98. But the county pays all its expenses from its tax levy.

Claim City Wants More Power.

To enjoy the lighter taxes and other attractions which the county has to offer in the way of fewer restrictions and more room and quiet, some of the former residents of the corporate city have moved into Baltimore county. Many more have gone into that section from other parts of Maryland and from other States. The opponents of annexation claim that the rulers of the political Baltimore, which they insist is not at all identical with the real city, want to grasp all these people and all the wealth of the suburbs and thereby acquire the power which the mass of people and taxable property would give them—a power which it is alleged would enable them to expand the limits of the city at will thereafter and control the political affairs of the State. It is contended that if the voters of Maryland will this fall elect the Democratic candidates for State Comptroller and the Legislature this plan will fail, for the Democratic party has declared in favor of annexation, but with a referendum. The opponents of the proposed bill claim that it is so drastic that its framers know the people of the suburbs will not vote to enter the city upon such terms.

Modern Serenaders . . .
. . By Frederick J. Haskin

It was 1 o'clock in the morning. The musical young man in the front apartment, first floor, was entertaining a little party with a spirited rendition of "A Tear, a Kiss, a Smile," keeping up the while a sprightly line of small talk over his left shoulder. There was also present a young lady with a soprano voice, who now and again burst impulsively into song.

The man in the flat overhead, who had to get up at 6, stood it as long as he could, and then stuck his head out the window and roared "Cut it out!" The timid chap in the flat across the court needed only this encouragement to express his own feelings, and promptly chimed in on the protest. Still the musical one bravely stood his ground, but when a third voice joined the insurgents he reluctantly quit and organized a game of auction bridge. The Athabascan apartments settled at last to rest. But not for long. At 7 a. m., a hurdy-gurdy or street piano took up its position under the window of the musical young man and brought a poetic retribution upon his nerves. There was nothing poetic about it except the retribution, either. And the Corsican bandit stuck to his post until he got the nickle of blackmail for which he was working.

This sort of thing, occurring in many places every night, has led some thoughtful ones to reflect upon the blessings of music and how they might be curtailed.

Scientists say that dust and noise are the cause of a large part of modern sickness, and since dust afflicts chiefly those in certain industries, a large share of American ill-health, and especially of the famous American nervousness, is due to noise. And beyond a doubt among the leading noises are those made by amateur musicians and mechanical musical instruments. Why their restriction has not been more widely and seriously considered, why it has been left in private hands instead of being made the subject of municipal law, as it should be, are questions difficult to answer.

No doubt one reason lies in the fact that music, however much suffering it may cause, is also the bringer of much joy. Another reason is doubtless that the making and selling of musical instruments is a powerful industry, and powerful industries have great influence. But the music nuisance is reaching a point where it should be mitigated, or it will produce reaction. There is no longer room in our crowded, nervous civilization for the unrestricted and unmerciful use of musical instruments. It is to the interest of the music industry to see that music is kept in its proper place.

Among the many necessities of life which in recent years have climbed beyond the reach of the majority, quiet occupies an important place. The high price of silence has not received the attention it deserves. In a recent study of street noises, it was reported that the poor were the greatest sufferers, and the street piano was especially condemned. But the poor are by no means the only or the chief sufferers. There is not an apartment dweller who does not suffer from lost sleep and ruined temper at least once in a while. Many have to regulate their whole lives in accordance with the noises that besiege their rest. It is only the family which can afford a detached home with a big yard that achieves assured repose.

The experience may be taken as typical of a young man whose modest ambition it was to retire at 10 and rise at 6:30 in order to do some mental work in the cool of the morning. He first tried a room in a Young Men's Christian Association. About the third night he lay down to the combined accompaniments of an association band practicing on the floor below, a mandolin club on the same floor, and a piano in the next room. All of these noises continued until after 11. In an apartment house the young man fared no better. He is now advertising for board on a farm.

Numerous plans, societies and municipal laws for the abatement of noises have sprung up within the last few years, but none of them have dealt specifically with music, and most of them seem to have deliberately evaded that most important phase of the subject.

Thus Baltimore gained fame by hiring a "noise cop," who went about wringing the necks of crowing roosters, shutting up newsboys, making note of flat-wheeled cars. He compiled a list of municipal noises that ought to be stopped. Among them are noted "screechy phonographs" and "tuneless pianos." Why limit the indictment thus?

Many of these investigators seem to proceed blandly—ussumption that a musical noise is no nuisance at all. They speak of making automobile horns and trolley bells musical, so that the blare and clang of street traffic will become a medley of notes and chimes. That would be lovely, but the experience of many persons indicates that the music is more fatal to sleep than plain noise. The very rythm of the tune running through the head, unless the music is faint or distant, or of a soothing lullaby strain, makes sleep impossible. For sleep is in itself a rythm and it cannot be adjusted to rag-time. You can sing a child to sleep with a slow song in a minor key, but to sing "Dixie" or "Waiting for Robert E. Lee" in a loud voice to a sleepy child would be to torture it. The same is true of a sleepy adult.

The statistics of the musical industry show that the number of instruments, mechanical and otherwise, in use in this country has multiplied enormously in recent years. This is in many ways desirable. The expansion of joy and rythm should not be checked, but it must be regulated.

SUFFRAGE SUNBEAMS.

Do you know—

That in 1776 Thomas Jefferson declared that "taxation without representation was tyranny." He so firmly believed it that he declared in 1804 it was inconceivable "that any State should bestow the suffrage upon the most ignorant and besotted man and deny it to the most intelligent and virtuous woman."

That still farther back in 1836 Abraham Lincoln was so strongly in favor of Woman Suffrage that in his canvas for the legislature he announced as his platform the grant of Suffrage "to all of sufficient intelligence and character not excluding the women."

That coming down to more modern times in 1915 Colorada declared after 22 years experience that "Woman Suffrage had proven in all respects materially helpful to good government among the people and to a noticeable degree had inculcated a higher respect for the majesty and supremacy of the law.

That women own probably one half of the property in every state. In New York of the 5 largest taxpayers 3 are women. In New Orleans over half the property is owned by women. In Maryland where many of the largest tax payers are widows and unmarried women they are not even allowed a vote on bond issues.

That the Antis declare women do not want the vote. Answer: They have brought forward the demand for it before every State in the Union.

That it is the women who raise the men who fill our armies and carry on the work of the country. Should they not have a voice in the laws which protect the morals and well being of the home and of the women and children, of the men whom they have brought up for their country's service?

Let us not only remember that it is a war for democracy that is being waged, but that the cornerstone upon which all democracies is founded is the ballot.

ANNEXATION BILL EXTREMELY UNFAIR

THE PRESTON-FIELD FORCE BILL, which is designed to annex about half the people and wealth of Baltimore County to the City, IS SO UNFAIR THAT ITS SPONSORS DARE NOT SUBMIT IT TO THE PEOPLE TO BE AFFECTED BY THE CHANGE. The Constitution of Maryland declares that there must be a referendum, or vote of the people in such cases, but the annexationists claim, in effect, that the Constitution is unconstitutional.

In 1888 the city proposed a fair annexation bill, the Legislature passed it and THE NORTHERN AND WESTERN SUBURBS voted to go into the city. Most of them have been regretting it ever since, BUT IF THEY HAVE BEEN BURNT BY A FAIR BILL, WHAT WILL HAPPEN TO THE PEOPLE OF THE PROPOSED NEW ANNEX UNDER A BILL WHICH ITS FRAMERS REFUSE TO SUBMIT TO THEM, SAYING "A REFERENDUM MEANS NO ANNEXATION."

Next week we will point out some of the many iniquitous provisions of this bill, which the Democratic Convention refused to indorse, but which the Republican party indorsed with emphasis.

THE BALTIMORE COUNTY NON-PARTISAN CITIZENS' PROTECTIVE COMMITTEE.

A MILITARY NECESSITY

Is the Raising of More and Better Livestock.

With a year of good crops, an abundance of forage, and prices higher than at any other time in the country's history, Maryland should not take too lightly the plea now being heard from coast to coast,—"Raise more livestock."

To heed this plea is necessary; it is profitable as well. Perhaps no clearer summary of the situation has been given than that recently by Assistant Secretary Vrooman who declared, "The keeping of more livestock was highly desirable before the war. It is now a national necessity, first, because of the terrible dearth of meat animals not only in this country but throughout the world; second, because no waste of feeds should be permitted, and the thing that will prevent waste of feeds upon the farm is the production of more livestock. The fact of keeping more livestock as a military necessity does not mean that it is any the less a good business. The farmer should not lose this golden opportunity to cash in his waste forage at war prices."

While certain sections of Maryland have brought their livestock industry to success and profit, it can hardly be said that the State as a whole has reached the point in the development of the livestock industry that awaits it,—but awaits it only on the condition that better feeding, care and sanitation are comprehended as essentials to success in this line. Such is the opinion of Dr. S. S. Buckley of the State Extension Service.

Perhaps disease has been the greatest factor tending to depress the industry. This is true at least as regards the hog, as farmers in many sections of the State well know. But with cholera in hogs, and various diseases affecting cattle and sheep, proper methods of care will eliminate losses sufficiently to enable the farmer again to put his farm on a livestock basis.

At the present time changes to fall feed and quarters for most livestock are taking place. Houses for the winter are being prepared, farm-lots cleaned up and disinfection practiced. At no season of the year is there better opportunity offered to make the entire farm a healthy place for all farm animals. The white-wash brush and disinfectant spray should be wielded with a lavish hand. All trash should be raked into a pile and burned; the manure should be spread on the field, good troughs and watering places should be provided, and drainage around all buildings should be perfected. Make the barns and sheds light and well ventilated. The good stockman wants his animals well sheltered and comfortably provided for. He is doubtless the most humane being the world, and the reward is satisfaction through profit and the fact that his livestock is going to feed a hungry and meat impoverished world.

HINDENBURG'S PLAN

Evacuation of Belgium With View to Mesopotamin Offensive.

The Germans went into Belgium mainly for military reasons; they will evacuate Belgium, now definitely in opposition to the policy of the government, is addressing meetings of German patriots on the folly of Germany's disinteresting herself in Belgium, but the very violence of his language shows that he feels himself to be fighting a cause which is losing, if it is not already lost. It would appear from Von Kuhlmann's statement that the German Foreign Office is prepared to evacuate Belgium under certain conditions, but the German Foreign Office has made so many bad blunders, and its prestige is so impaired, that it would never venture to express a view of its own on such a question as this unless it had the military heads of the army behind it. One may go further, says a "Student of War" in the Manchester (England) Guardian. The Foreign Office has long since ceased to originate policy; it follows the army chiefs. That is to say, the policy outlined by Von Kuhlmann is not in accord with military policy but was in fact dictated by it. The Foreign Office is the first to speak publicly, but Von Kuhlmann after all is only the shadow on the blinds that conceals German military counsels. Tirpitz, by talking as he does, shows that he is completely out of touch with the facts of the military situation. The leading fact is that the occupation of Belgium, always a mistake, is now become such an entanglement that Hindenburg wants to cut himself loose from it.

The best time for the evacuation is, of course, not now, but early next spring, just before the Allies are ready to attack. If the evacuation is to be brought off successfully it is important, especially in a flat country like Belgium, that as many screening heights as possible should be retained. Hence the extreme obstinacy with which the Germans are clinging to their positions on the height, east of Ypres and the high importance of every 100 yards of progress that we can make now before winter sets in.

The Germans know that mere passive defense never won a war, but only a vigorous offense. There is no possibility of a successful offensive in the West. And to create the possibility of an offensive anywhere the lines in the West will have to be very considerably shortened. From Nancy to the Belgian coast along the present German lines is about 260 miles, from Nancy to Namur is about 160 miles, from Nancy to Liege along the line of the Meuse is about 145 miles. That is to say, Hindenburg by evacuating Flanders could reduce the length of his lines by one-third, and by nearly one-half if he abandoned Antwerp. In addition, his new positions, centered as they would be round the great massif of the Ardennes, would have much greater natural strength.

These are advantages very well worth having. They have no doubt their corresponding disadvantages. The Belgian coast is valuable as a base for submarines and for air raids on England. But by next spring Germany will have got all the usefulness that she expects out of this particular form of warfare. The advance of the British armies again in Belgium would bring our airmen nearer to Germany, but the chief obstacle to effective raiding of Germany is the crossing of their lines, and this the Germans would not forfeit by a retirement.

The saving of the men by the shortening of the Belgian line could be used in two ways. First, to strengthen the reserve behind the front lines, and, secondly, to attack Russia. Hindenburg, it must be remembered, is an East Prussian, and has no sympathy with the Westphalian commercial interests which in the person of Von Tirpitz allied themselves with the Prussian Junkers for the purposes of this war. He might have a chance, if he can spare anything like 500,000 men from the West by the contraction of his front, of occupying Petrograd and Moscow—unless, indeed, the Russian armies reformed—and perhaps of forcing a separate peace on her.

The political advantages of such a program are obvious enough. Germany might try to secure peace with Belgium, or at any rate an undertaking that in consideration of the evacuation Belgium should not be used as a basis of attack. Belgium would refuse such an offer. But apart from that Germany would probably hope by evacuating the larger part of Belgium and a promise to evacuate the rest on the conclusion of peace to further her peace propaganda.

A further advantage of this new orientation of German policy towards the East would be that it might enable her to give more effective assistance to Turkey, or at any rate to induce her to prolong her resistance. There are signs of the approach of a vigorous Turkish offensive which may be directed against Mesopotamia or possible Palestine. Von Falkenhayn has not gone to Turkey for nothing.

CITY NOT IN COUNTY

BALTIMORE'S STATUS DIFFERENT FROM OTHER TOWNS.

Made An Independent Division Of Maryland By Constitution Of 1851. Referendum Adopted In 1864 For Express Protection Of Suburbs.

(Prepared by the Baltimore County Non-Partisan Citizens' Protective Committee.)

Prior to 1851 the city of Baltimore was merely an incorporated town within Baltimore county. The extensions of the city by acts of the Legislature in 1745, 1747, 1773 and 1816 simply enlarged the city within the county, its inhabitants remaining residents of Baltimore county. The Constitution of 1851, by the votes of the people of the entire State, separated Baltimore city from Baltimore county and made it an independent unit of the State, on the same footing with the counties.

Failure to understand the status of Baltimore city before the Constitution of 1851 and after it became independent is not uncommon and prevents some persons from seeing clearly why annexation cannot still be made by a simple act of the Legislature, just as was done in the years above mentioned. Men so prominent and supposedly learned as the members of the "Greater Baltimore Extension League's" committee say they cannot see why the limits of Baltimore city cannot be extended, just as had been done with Frederick City, Annapolis, Hagerstown, Bladensburg, Easton and Ellicott City. They overlook the fact that in all those cases the inhabitants taken into the towns mentioned remained residents of their respective counties.

Republicans Adopted Referendum.

Thirteen years after the Constitution of 1851 was adopted the Constitutional Convention of 1864 was called. The Republican party had secured full control of Maryland. In the struggle to maintain the Union the Republicans had been compelled to deny the validity of the doctrine of States' rights, yet the claim of the counties to their territorial integrity and independence, subject only to the State government, appealed to the delegates so strongly that they incorporated into the Constitution of 1864 the provision:

"Nor shall the lines of any county be changed without the consent of a majority of the legal voters residing within the limits of the lines proposed to be changed."

Made To Fit Present Case.

And the debate in connection with this clause shows that it was expressly intended to provide for such a case as that now before the people. The clause was offered by Mr. James L. Ridgely, a delegate from Baltimore county, who said:

"I know that Baltimore city must increase and expand, until in the process of time it shall absorb a large portion of the area of Baltimore county, and I say godspeed to it. I do not propose to throw any obstacle whatever in its way. But I simply ask that when they apply to the Legislature for an extension of its boundaries there shall be a limitation upon the power of the Legislature to grant, which shall require the assent of the people residing in the portion of the county asked to be included within the limits of Baltimore city."

In 1867 the Democrats had regained control of the State. They made a new Constitution, but the essential justice of the provision to protect the counties from arbitrary dismemberment so appealed to them that they left it in the present Constitution, changing the meaning not at all and the words but a little, so as to make them stronger and plainer. This language seems perfectly plain and easily understood and it is claimed it does not need a lawyer to explain it to any sane man.

Right Way the Only Way.

As the Constitution now stands there is no way to extend the corporate limits of Baltimore city without the consent of the people in the territory to be annexed. This seems entirely reasonable, for it is claimed that whenever any section become city-like in character and the city presents a fair bill the people will vote to be taken in. This was done in 1888. If the proposed bill should be passed it would result in expensive and tedious litigation, which could only be decided in one way—against the city.

The Annexation acts of 1874 and 1888, both provided for the Constitutional referendum. The Republican State Convention of 1915 flatly reaffirmed the principle, but this year because of a political deal, it is alleged, the Republican platform declares, in effect, that the people of the Belt shall be taken into the city without being permitted to vote upon the matter, thus reversing the party's unbroken record. The Democratic platform declares squarely in favor of an annexation bill with a referendum to the people affected, as required by the Constitution.

The farmers in the part of Baltimore city known as the Annex of 1888 complain that there are many barren stalks in their cornfields this year, which considerably reduces the yield. Expert agriculturists say this comes from a failure to properly test the seed planted last spring.

Baltimore county people claim that if the city would put a winning base ball team in the field it would do much more to "boost" the town than acquiring 70,000 people by annexation.

IF YO BELIEVE THAT YOUR SON—YOUR NEIGHBOR'S SON—THE MILLION FIGHTING SONS OF AMERICA—SHOULD HAVE AN EVEN CHANCE FOR LIFE IN THIS WORLD-WAR, AND WOULD BE SURE THAT HE GETS IT—

Buy A Liberty Bond NOW

The wars of today are won by the combatants with the greatest resources. Food, ammunition, clothing, supplies of every sort, count as much as men, and often more. Napoleon declared that an army fights upon its stomach. All these necessaries come down, in the last analysis, to money, and more money—yours and that of every other real American—the government must have and have at once.

We are in a life and death struggle between autocracy and democracy and democracy can not win without our help. Understand this clearly. Let it sink into you, become a part of you, and then live it every hour of every day.

Hundreds of thousands of our best and bravest, clean-cut, splendid young Americans, are being trained for immediate service in the trenches. Every dollar we withhold strikes directly at the lives of these boys who are doing their bit for us. They are giving their all to the cause. If we can not fight beside them we owe it to them and to ourselves to back them with our last dollar. It can mean no more than a temporary pinch to us. Think for one moment what it means to them.

The fight to which they go is our fight. Every one of them who falls is a sacrifice for US. He dies far away from home that WE may keep our home, live the life we have chosen, pursue the paths of peace in security and shelter.

These young fellows who are about to risk everything that makes existence worth while in our defense are our own flesh and blood. Every one of them is YOUR son, YOUR brother, YOUR nearest and dearest. Let every one of us get this fixed firmly in his mind (for it is literally true in a deeper sense than ever before in the world's history,) and he can not choose but give, just as he would strip himself of his last penny if his wife were dying or his child had to be operated upon to save its life.

You personally and the nation at large have never been in such dire, such imminent peril as that which threatens you at this moment. This is no figure of speech, indeed there are no words in the language that can adequately bring your danger home to you. Think of ruined Belgium, devasted Poland, and remember that every Liberty Bond you buy is a barrier between your loved ones and such horrors as these.

It is the safest investment on earth. Nowhere can earnings, savings, trust funds, or income investments be placed so securely—and you can sell your Liberty Bonds at any time you need the money. Think of getting FOUR PER CENT INTEREST on such an investment! And remember that the day the war ends, these bonds will command a large premium—4 per cent. Government bonds before we entered the war were selling at $116 on the stock exchange. There never was such a profitable bargain as the Liberty Bond, and money never did such glorious service.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Face to Face With the Emergencies Of Life.

In my former letter I used Jehoshaphat as an illustration of this subject. You will recall that I spoke of what he did not do. In this I want to call your attention to what he did do.

The first thing he did when he realized his predicament, and that he must face an army three times the size of his own, was to call his people to a fast. He Proclaimed a fast. This is an old time custom that was rigidly observed, as a means of grace and it was in reality to those who properly kept it. Though it has fallen out of practice, it is none the less a healthy disciplin for the soul. It tends to affect the soul and bring it into a proper state before God. This led to the second thing he did, viz.—he humbeled himself. He did not direct the people what to do, while he excused himself but he set the example by humbling himself before his God and his people. It isn't an easy matter for one to humble himself even privately, but to do this publicly, tries men's soul, for it takes grit. This course would be far more effective than for him to direct the people to do it, whilst he spared himself this painful duty. The result was a general humbling of themselves on the part of the people, and getting right with God. It meant putting away all known sin. Now he is in a position when he can draw near to God in prayer. This is his next slip. He prayed. He was not content to do this on the sly or secretly, but he did it openly, in the presence of his people. That was a splendid example for his people. How they must have admired their King who thus confessed his weakness and sought the help of the only one who could deliver him and his people. His action reminds us of Abraham and Moses, of Jacob and Daniel. We think to of Cromwell and his army when in great straits and special danger, how the great leader, earnestly led his army to the throne for help and deliverance. Nor can we help wondering at the wonderful manner in which they were saved. The Lord sent a dense fog, so that the enemy, though they were just across the hill, could not find them. Tennyson was quite right when he said "More things are wrought by prayer, than this world dreams of."

How logical it was for him then, after this, to trust in God. He showed his trust by going forward. There wouldn't have been much trust, had he sat down after praying and said, now I'll wait and see what the Lord will do. He did the common sense thing. He tried to answer his own prayers. He could say with the psalmist, "Mine eyes are towards the Lord." "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills, whence cometh my strength." He took hold of the promise by which his prayer was answered, "ye shall not need to fight in this battle: Let your selves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of Jehovah with you, O Judah and Jerusalem; fear not nor be dismayed; to-morrow go out against them; for Jehovah is with you."

They accepted it with such faith that joy and thanksgiving were immediately forth coming. They acknowledged it; they were thankful for it and did what they could to effect it.

We may, at some time, find ourselves in serious peril without its being any fault of our own. Judah did not provoke the assault. The emergency may come upon us like a clap of thunder out of a cloudless sky and from unexpected quarters. Financial ruin may suddenly stare us in the face. Disgrace may threaten us; men may turn against and do what they can to embarass or humiliate us. Bright morning turns to clouded noon and storm threatens us. This experience is a frequent one in life. What shall we do? What Jehoshaphat did.

To everyone comes the necessity of choosing a profession or calling. It is a serious question and a critical period in your life. Will you drift on without any definite object in view, trusting to luck—a happy go easy creature, content with enough to eat and wear—or will you consult your likes and dislikes, your ability and inclination, your judgment and reason and so select that for which you are best adapted and in which you will most likely be successful? Be sure you are right then go ahead. Stop, think, pray, trust God and see if He will not lighten the way for you, so that you shall feel confident you are right.

That will be one of life's emergencies when, like others, you are called to select a life companion. That is one of the most important events in your life. Some people fall in love like a baby in a tub of water, heels over head. It isn't the best way. Others plunge in like a boy in a swimming hole. It may chill them a bit at first, but they will soon get used to it. Others marry in haste to repent at leisure. They usually have the leisure all right. Many do not seem to exercise a bit of common sense or prudence in their choice and waken up, when it is too late to find out their mistake. Life is marred. Failure is written over it. Love went out of the door not to return.

Be admonished, my young friends, in this matter. Before you take that step, humble yourself before God and pray. Seek divine guidance, until you have the light of the Spirit and feel you are right. Then go ahead.

William H. Swauger, et. al., vs. Sarah Goldding et. al.

No. 2142 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is for the purpose of obtaining a decree for the sale of the real estate of Martha A. Swauger, late of Garrett county, deceased, and a distribution of the proceeds amongst the parties entitled to interest therein.

The Bill states that Martha A. Swauger departed this life May 2nd, 1917, inestate, possessed of a farm of 110 acres, located in said Garrett county, and left surviving her a husband, William H. Swauger and the following children, viz: William F. Swauger, George E. Swauger, Elizabeth Kerns, Sarah Golding, Albert Swauger, Mary Williams, Charles Swauger, Joseph Swauger, Ella Beelman and Lewis Swauger, all of whom being of full age. The said George E., Sarah, Mary, Charles, Ella and Lewis, being non-residents of the State of Maryland, and the said William H. Swauger, William F., Elizabeth, Albert and Joseph being residents of Maryland.

The Bill then states that the land is not susceptible of partition amongst the parties without loss and injury, and that it will be necessary to make sale of same in order to divide it.

The Bill then prays for a decree for sale of said property, and that the proceeds of same be divided and for general relief, and also prays for an order of publication against non-residents defendants and for subpoena against the resident defendants.

It is thereupon, this 10th day of October, 1917, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 16th day of November, 1917, give notice to Sarah Golding and George Golding, her husband, Mary Williams and Madison Williams, her husband, Charles Swauger and Tillie Swauger, his wife, Ella Beelman and Edward Beelman, her husband, Lewis Swauger and Mabel Swauger, his wife, all of whom are non-residents of the State of Maryland, and all of whom are of full age, of the object and substance of this Bill, and warning them to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 3d day of December next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed; or in lieu of said order of publication, the plaintiffs are authorized to give notice to the said non-residents defendants by personal service of this order and return thereof as provided by the laws of the State of Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii for the plaintiff from the defendant.

The Bill states that the plaintiff and defendant were married in the month of May, 1907, and lived together as man and wife in Pennsylvania and State of Maryland until on or about the 12th day of January, 1913.

The Bill further states that on or about said date that the said defendant did, without just cause or reason abandon and desert the said plaintiff, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly at least three years, and is deliberate, final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation.

The Bill further states that no children were born to the plaintiff and defendant as a result of said marriage.

The Bill then prays for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and for other relief.

VOLUME 42. OAKLAND, MARYLAND THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1917. NUMBER 36

FROM "OVER THERE"

Letter from the French Front Written By A Garrett County Boy.

The following letter was received a few days ago by Postmaster C. J. Rathbun from his son, C. J. Rathbun, who enlisted in the U. S. Marines about April 15th at Cumberland in company with Private Edward Lewis. After spending about five weeks in training at Philadelphia Marine Barracks, he was sent to France and there joined Pershing's expeditionary Force, young Lewis being left at Philadelphia and he is now stationed at Quantico, Va. Young Rathbun was one among the first Marines to see foreign service. His letter, while not descriptive and does not go into detail, contains about all the information the soldiers are allowed to impart in their communications. Undoubtedly Garrett county's representative on foreign soil would be glad to hear from his former schoolmates and friends. Address him as follows; "American Expeditionary forces, U. S. M. C., 5th Regiment, Headquarters Co., France."

Private Rathbun's letter follows:

October 7th, 1917.

My dear Father.

Knowing that you seldom write a personal letter, I sure had a right to be surprised at receiving yours today. I certainly appreciated it. Am very sorry that you had received no letters from me. Have written several, but suppose my tendency towards a spread mouth has caused my letters to get no farther than the censor.

You need not be afraid of sending something that I don't need in the way of clothes etc., especially socks and underwear. From the weather prevalent here at this time of the year I gather that the winter is something like the "glades of old Garrett" at its worst. While the government is very generous, they still leave room in our "sea bags" for clothes. We also have room for plenty of American tobacco. And speaking of tobacco, reminds me that I owe you five bucks, as I have lost our bet. Am getting plenty of money, so am going to make an allottment of ten dollars per month to Emma, as I think she could use it very handy while going to school. Am very thankful for the papers. Keep on sending them.

I think——would make one peach (?) of a soldier. While is is a fine life, it is no job for a "Mamma's boy" and falls far short of being a picnic.

Am glad you are so optimistical in regards to what our troops will do. We all have the same opinion, and are only waiting for a chance. I gather from your letter that your knowledge of French Geography is limited. Better look the country up again. I sure wish you were here also. This is a wonderful country. You speak of the sacrifices the Americans are making. Were you here you would know what it is to sacrifice. Could you but see French women of fifty years and over harnessed to a plow, or see twelve or fourteen year old boys doing the work of men, or girls doing a strong man's work in foundry's, you would understand what a real sacrifice is.

Believe "Buck" has some of the books and probably Lester has a couple and think some are in the office. Hope all are well. Hope to be home inside of a century. Love to all.

Your handsome (?)Eson,

JOE, JR.

Red Cross Beneficence.

The Loch Lynn Canning Club received the first prize for its exhibit at the County Fair in Oakland and in addition Mesdames Hart, Carroll, Sterling, Albert White and Misses Mary O'Donnell and Grace Callis were awarded prizes as individual members for the excellent work done by them. Naturally, both the Club and the town are somewhat elated over their record but their feelings are being coined into patriotism because the check for fifteen dollars has been forwarded to the National Red Cross to be used in relief work as needed by our Maryland boys who are in Uncle Sam's service.

MORE SOLDIERS ORDERED OUT

Remainder of Selected Men From Garrett to Report Monday.

Additional orders received yesterday at the office of the local board of selected men for the National Army, requires that Garrett county send to Camp Meade on the morning of Tuesday, the 6th inst., the remainder of the quota, consisting of forty-seven men.

PEOPLE OF THE ENTIRE STATE INTERESTED IN ANNEXATION

The Legislature of 1816 thought so. It extended the limits of Baltimore to more than eight times what they were before, without any referendum and against the protest of the people of Baltimore County, taking in thousands of acres of forest and farm lands.

SEE WHAT FOLLOWED.

The population of Baltimore in 1816 was 46,555, and its area 937 acres. By Act of 1816, Chapter 209, the limits were extended to 8,448 acres.

The population in 1830 was 80,-625, a gain, within fourteen years after annexation, of 75 per cent. over the census of 1810.

If the Legislature of 1918 gives Baltimore City the extension asked for, a gain in the same ratio would give Baltimore a population of one million in the census of 1930.

WHAT THIS WILL MEAN TO MARYLAND.

(1) The City will be paying nearly twice as much revenue to the State for building and maintaining roads and other expenses of the State government;

(2) A city of a million people will furnish a better market, and higher prices, for the products of the State;

(3) A bigger market and higher prices for products will mean that farm lands will be worth more throughout the State;

(4) Will enlarge the opportunity for the ambitious boys and girls who want to try their fortunes in a great city.

HELP TO KEEP YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS IN MARYLAND.

You can't keep them all home. Some of the boys and girls from the farms and the smaller cities and towns are bound to go to a big city. You can help to keep them in Maryland by helping to make your own big city a Greater Baltimore.

BALTIMORE WILL HAVE A MILLION PEOPLE IF YOU GIVE HER ROOM TO GROW.

There is no reason why Baltimore should not grow as fast now as it did in the beginning of the last century. Within fourteen years after the extension of 1816 Baltimore had caught and passed Philadelphia, and was the second city in the Union from that time until the Civil War. Now Baltimore is seventh, Cleveland having passed Baltimore in 1910, by only 2300, because the Legislature of Ohio had extended the limits of Cleveland. But the tide of manufacturing and commerce is turning to Baltimore. Here exports of grain are now second in the United States, being surpassed only by New York.

The Committee which prepared the League Bill, say in their report:

"There is a magnificent opportunity immediately at hand for a tremendous development of manufacturing at Baltimore * * *."

Our City is enjoying an era of splendid progress and improvement, both public and private. The advantages of the harbor and the surrounding land as a place for one of the great shipping and manufacturing centres of the world is becoming widely known. The Committee believe that in order to realize the highest and best development of the City and harbor of Baltimore, the whole territory connected with the development should be under the one government of Baltimore City, rather than partly in the City, partly in Baltimore County and partly in Anne Arundel County, and that it is of great importance to have the extension of the City limits made by the Legislature of 1918, in order that the City may get the advantage of its proper standing in the census of 1920.

There is no politics in the proposed Bill; but simply a matter effecting the best development from the standpoint of business, commerce, health and good government of this part of the State, and directly promoting the general welfare of the entire State. The passage of the proposed Bill will not give Baltimore City a single additional vote in the Legislature nor will it deprive Baltimore or Anne Arundel County of a single vote in the Legislature. The Committee, therefore, recommend to the League the approval of this Bill and express the hope that it may be approved and passed by the Legislature solely on the ground that they believe it to be a matter which will promote the public welfare.

DO YOU WANT TO INJURE YOUR OWN CHIEF CITY?

In an editorial, the SUN ask this question.

"Do the people of Maryland want to treat their only big city like the Chinese women treat their feet—squeeze it in bandages until it can only hobble, while other cities run toward greatness?"

HELP MARYLAND BY HELPING BALTIMORE

You can help to make Baltimore a city of a million people within five years; to promote the health of the people of Baltimore and 75,000 people to be annexed; to give the new territory better police and fire protection; a better system for developing their property; more encouragement to manufacturing by the exemption of all personal property; better school facilities for their children; to increase the value of land and products throughout the State; to increase the revenue from the city to the State government; to make Baltimore a Greater Baltimore and Maryland a greater State by voting for men for the Legislature who will vote for the League Bill for extending the limits of Baltimore City.

Won't you help.

Dogs, Dogs and More Dogs And No Dog Law.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I wish you would allow me space for this item. We are asked, why don't you farmers raise more sheep? Sheep are one of the most profitable animals we have.

How can we farmers raise more sheep if there are more dogs than sheep?

There are too many dogs running at large. Why do people raise more dogs than sheep? If dog raisers would figure what it costs to keep a dog a year, there would not be so many worthless dogs.

The dog law, and dog tax are to be made. Farmers have to keep on the lookout for their sheep, poultry and cattle on the account of those worthless dogs. Farmers have to keep their hogs and cattle enclosed. Why not make a law for dog owners to keep their dogs at home.

I have no objection to anyone keeping all the dogs he wants but I do object to them running over my place killing my stock, chickens, birds, etc. I see in one of my this week's farm papers that two dogs in one night killed $1,000 worth of sheep for one man. Then ask why more sheep are not raised.

I say kill the dogs or make the owners keep them at home.

"Subscriber" seems to think that the dog tax laws are not carried out. There should be a law to compel every dog to be kept at home, and all farmers and gardners should have the privilege to shoot everyone caught running at large. If they will do that for a year or two, they won't have to ask: "Why are there not more sheep raised?" If people had rather eat dog than sheep, let them go on raising dog.

GRANTSVILLE.

A Harvest Home service was held at the Lutheran church on Sunday morning, with a most able sermon by the pastor, Rev. E. E. Oney. The choir rendered pleasing and appropriate selections with a solo part by George Barbarow, of Paterson, N. J. The decorations were unique, being composed mostly of fruits and vegetables brought for the purpose of sending to the Loysville Orphans' Home. There were also a few flowers and ferns upon the altar. The people responded to the call for the orphanage with their usual liberality, and large quantities of flour, potatoes, cereals, canned fruit, etc. were brought to the church and on Monday packed and taken to West Salisbury from which point they were shipped to the orphanage at Loysville.

Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Keller, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Getty and Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Bender were in Frostburg, Monday night, where the gentlemen attended a stag banquet given by the Banker's Association, and the ladies attended a play at the Lyric Theatre, after which they repaired to the home of Mrs. Bender's mother, Mrs. Conrad Gantt, where they were royally entertained by that lady, who served a banquet for ladies only.

Rev. E. E. Oney will preach his farewell sermon to his Grantsville congregation on Sunday, Oct. 28th, at 7:30 p. m. prior to his removal to Kitanning, Pa. Rev. Oney has endeared himself to his people by his ability and deep interest and unflagging zeal in his work, and his departure will be a cause of much regret, both to his congregation and others in the community.

CITY'S WANTS LARGE

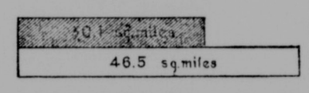
WILL TAKE NEARLY ONE HALF OF COUNTY'S POPULATION.

Taxable Basis Proposed To Be Annexed Greater Than That Of Six Counties Of Southern Maryland Combined.

(Prepared by the Baltimore County Non-Partisan Citizens' Protective Committee.)

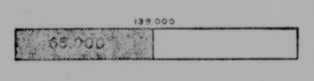
Many persons who do not object to the annexation of a moderate part of Baltimore county to the city, including only the closely built-up suburbs, say the territory, population and wealth to be taken from the county by the bill proposed by Mayor Preston are unreasonable and excessive, and that the result will be disastrous to the county.

According to the statement of the Non-Partisan Greater Baltimore Extension League, as published in the League's official pamphlet, the area to be taken from Baltimore county is 46.5 square miles. The area of Baltimore city at present is 30.1 square miles. The relative sizes of the city and the proposed annex are readily grasped by looking at the figure below, in which the shaded portion represents the city and the white space the portion proposed to be taken from the county:

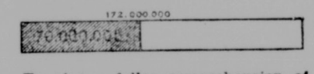


A large part of this area proposed to be taken from the county is composed of woodland and farming and grazing country.

The Annexation League's estimate is that 65,000 people will be taken from Baltimore county by the proposed plan of city extension. The whole population of the county is now 139,000. The following figure indicates the whole population of the county, the shaded portion represents the portion that would be lost to it by annexation as proposed:



According to the report of the State Tax Commission, published by the Annexation League, the assessible basis of Baltimore county is $172,494,870.68, and the estimate of the League is that the city will take $70,000,000 of this. The figure below shows the whole taxable basis of the county, the shaded part representing the portion that the city proposes to take:



To give a fuller comprehension of the population which the city proposes to take from Baltimore county, comparison is made with the populations of the following other counties:

County.	Population.
St. Mary's	17,090
Charles	16,386
Calvert	10,325
Howard	16,106
Total	59,847

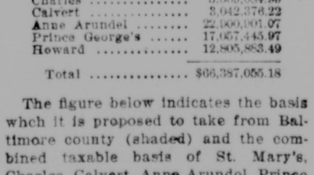
When it comes to taxable basis, the illustration is even more striking. As stated above, the basis which the annexationists propose to acquire from Baltimore county, is $70,000,000. The county people claim that this is an underestimate. But, taking the figures of the Greater Baltimore League as a basis, the county people compare them with the basis of the following counties, using again the State Tax Commission's report:

County.	Taxable Basis.
St. Mary's	$ 5,011,393.44
Charles	5,569,084.60
Calvert	3,042,376.22
Anne Arundel	22,500,001.07
Prince George's	17,057,445.97
Howard	12,805,853.49
Total	$66,387,055.18

The figure below indicates the basis which it is proposed to take from Baltimore county (shaded) and the combined taxable basis of St. Mary's, Charles, Calvert, Anne Arundel, Prince George's, and Howard counties (white):



The Baltimore county people admit that certain expenses will be reduced by the taking away of this large population and basis, but the overhead expense, or cost of management, will remain the same, as all the territory left the county is comparatively thinly settled. The road and school systems of the county, which are among the best in the country, will necessarily suffer badly. The Baltimore countians insist that the condition is precisely similar to the one presented when some railroad corporation needs but a few acres of a man's farm, but those acres contain all his buildings. He is left a large area, but it is of little comparative value.

SHORT RUN

What proved to be one of the most enjoyable festivales of the season was held at Mr. J. H. Wilson's sugar camp last Wednesday evening in form of a marsh-mallow toast, given by Misses Synda and Ruth Wilson. The guests, fifteen in number, wore masks and costumes, and a prize was given for the best make up which was justly awarded to Mr. Milo Wilson who impersonated a mountaineer. Other costumes worthy of mention were Miss U. S. A. and "The Witch" who had a good fortune for everyone.

The camp was beautifully decorated with big red apples, red and yellow corn ears, pumpkin Jack o'lanterns and myriads of autumn leaves. A cheerful blaze burned in the furnace, and the young folks had oceans of fun toasting marshmallows over the blaze and roasting chestnuts among the coals.

EVERY G. O. P. CANDIDATE DESERVES SUPPORT.

Election is less than a week off and the campaign, devoid of the spectacular, is nearly ended. The Republican candidates have conducted a quiet but active campaign and the majority of the voters have had an opportunity to meet each candidate and find out for themselves what representative men the party has named for the various offices to be filled next Tuesday.

Garrett now, as she has for more than a quarter of a century, stands solidly behind Republicanism. The party's tenents are dear to a substantial majority of her sons. It is vitally necessary for the purposes of good government "by the people and for the people," to assert in a way that will leave no doubt that the Republican party and its principles are held as dearly now as they were in years past and that the decision of the people at the polls on Tuesday will drive this fact home in the minds of all the voters.

In view of the overshadowing world events election day may pass all too quietly. It is just as much the duty of a citizen to vote as it is for him to stand loyally by the country. With history making events transpiring every day, with no man able to foretell what the next day will bring forth it is paramount that the voters go to the polls Tuesday and by their suffrage assure that Republicans, men tried and true, men picked as candidates from a long list of excellent men through a county-wide referendum, men standing on a platform of efficiency and economy in public affairs be placed in the important offices.

Never before has the Republican party offered such a strong platform. Never before has there been greater need that Garrett send to the legislative halls at Annapolis a state senator pledged to the Republican reform and a solid delegation to the house similarly sworn. The Republican party should be in control of both branches of the legislature. The Republican and Independent voters must wake up and the country must do her bit in good old fashioned form by a regular "landslide" majority for the entire Republican ticket.

The personnel of the ticket is one of which the voters need have do trepidation. They were not selected by a liltle group of men, a party's remnant, but were chosen by the voters.

Every straight-thinking citizen must see his responsibility to his county and his State. Let no man falter on election day but march in solid phalanx to the polls and cast his vote for Harvey J. Speicher, one of the hardest working and most progressive young farmers of the county for the Senate where he has served eight years with honor and credit to his native county. Send Nathan R. Selby, Edwin A. Weimer and Albert T. White, all progressive, honorable young men as Garrett county's representatives in the House of Delegates. The remainder of the ticket is just as worthy of the support of every conscientious voter. Look over the list of candidates and remember they stand for every principle of good government both local and National. The attention of the voters is particularly directed to the Commissioner's ticket composed of Mr. Browning and Mr. Miller. As business men they stand without a peer in the county. None of the candidates ever failed to "make good" in any thing undertaken by them, so then why not give them your undivided support on Tuesday.

FOOD SAVING.

Harry A. Wheeler, food administrator for Illinois, reminds American consumers that this nation must save 125,000,000 bushels of wheat, that it must send 125,000 tons of sugar to France, that Italy is on short rations and must be helped; that the United States, in short, must come promptly to the relief of its allies in order that undernourishment of their people shall not become a more effective enemy than the armed might of Germany.

Wheatless and meatless days therefore have been established by the food administrator. The regulations applied on those days in hotels and restaurants should be applied with equal effectiveness by the people themselves in their own homes. Indeed, voluntary action of this sort is sought by the national food administration. It is hoped that people everywhere will restrict themselves to the articles of diet that are to be found in plenty in this country and that the people of the allied nations do not require of us.

That course would entail no real hardship. On the contrary, it would produce many good results. The people of this nation are now brought face to face with the necessity of practicing wise self-denial at least on a moderate scale. Not very much is asked of them, and what is asked would commonly benefit individuals while shortening the course of the war. Prompt and cheerful compliance with the food administrator's suggestions should be the universal rule. It would be humiliating to be forced by government fiat to regulate our diet for our own good.

A GREAT WORK NEEDING SUPPORT

A cause which certainly deserves support from Maryland is the work which is being done by the Young Men's Christian Association, for the carrying on of which $35,000,000 is needed. Maryland's quota has been set at $400,000, and the ultimate benefits to the country will cause the amount to be raised to appear small. The sum of $35,000,000 has not been arrived at by guesswork, but every cent represents an actual and carefully investigated need. Budgets of previous years were consulted and even the amount of stationery used was computed. Nor was a million dollars thrown in for good measure, nor a thousand, nor ten dollars. This money is to be spent in counteracting the evil effects of war in general on the susceptibilities of young men, the stultifying influence of indiscriminate mingling of million of men from all walks in life and with widely varying moral natures. As a business investment it is a good one to make, the paying of money to carry on this work. Aside from the spiritual good that will come to the men so ministered to, the business fabric of the country will benefit. After the Civil War, statistics show, the majority of the voters were soldiers. The voting power of this country at the conclusion of this war will be largely in the hands of soldiers. It is to make sure that the soldiers will cast their votes as good men, as good citizens, that the Young Men's Christian Association needs this money. Otherwise, the damage to business may be greater than one can compute. Sound business on sound morals. The Young Men's Christian Association is working to implant sound morals in the young men in camps and at the front. That is the situation; that is the work. We have confidence in the Maryland business man to see the spiritual and economical reasons for giving to the fund.

BIG REPUBLICAN RALLY SATURDAY

Congressman Z hlman and Prof. Heaps Made Addresses.

Congressman Frederick N. Zihlman and Prof. William Heaps, of Baltimore, addressed an enthusiastic Republican rally in the Opera House here Saturday night. The size of the audience was diminished by a heavy storm which kept many farmers in the county who had planned to attend, away. The employes of the Kendall Lumber Company at Crellin numbering 110, of whom 106 are Republicans, had planned to attend the rally in a body but the storm had made roads impassable. All the Republican candidates were present to meet the voters.

Charles Ashby, chairman of the Garrett Republican committee, called the meeting to order and presented former State's Attorney Julius C. Renninger, who presided and introduced the speakers.

Congressman Frederick F. Zihlman, making his first appearance at a political gathering in this county since he became the district's representative at the nation's capital, was enthusiastically received. The Congressman paid a high tribute to the Republican candidates, many of whom, he said, were his close friends, and predicted the election of the entire ticket in the westernmost county of the State. He discussed the planks of the party in an interesting way, saying they were the strongest offered the voters in years. The people of Maryland, he said, should elect a Republican legislature this year in order to bring about the needed reforms in the State.

Mr. Zihlman explained the failure of the soldiers' and sailors' vote bill at the extra war session of the legislature stating "the Democratic state organization sacrificed this meritorious reform rather than wipe out the iniquitous Wilson ballot and proposed placing a trick ballot in the hands of the soldiers in army camps and on foreign soil who happened to be residents of the southern Maryland counties."

Mr. Zihlman deplored the public statement of William L. Marbury, of Baltimore, in which Mr. Marbury stated he would vote for the Democratic ticket because he believed his friends in Washington would not want Maryland to go Republican this year and in which he announced a Republican victory in this state might be misinterpreted and misunderstood. Mr. Zihlman called attention to the support given the President at the capital by the Republicans when leaders of the Democratic party failed to give the needed backing and declared that "no one had the right at this time to state that a vote for Republican candidates and Republican principles might be 'misunderstood and misinterpreted,' as no one can question the loyalty of Republicans to their country."

Prof. William J. Heaps, paid a tribute to the work of the Republican senators and representatives at the recent extra session of Congress. He said they had stood by the flag in the present crisis as they had always stood in the past and members of the Republican party, he said, had stood by the President and made possible legislation to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion while members of the President's own party had seemed to be running in an opposite direction.

Prof. Heaps discussed state affairs since the Democrats had been in control. He called attention, in a significant way to the constantly mounting tax rate. He condemned the two million dollar bond issue authorized by the last regular session of the legislature which, he said, was caused by extravagance and lack of system on the part of the officials in charge of State finances.

The professor paid a splendid tribute to William O. Atwood, Republican candidate for comptroller, in whose interest the rally was primarily held. Mr. Atwood was unable to attend, having been called to Baltimore after campaigning in Allegany county, by important conferences. Mr. Atwood, Prof. Heaps said, was as prominently identified as any man he knew in the business, social and fraternal life of Baltimore and for twenty years has been actively identified with every movement tending towards the upbuilding and betterment of his home city.

Despite the fact that Garrett county is rockribbed Republican and that the Democrats have named but one candidate for House of Delegates and one for county commissioner and the Republican candidates for clerk of the court, county treasurer and clerk to the county commissioners are unopposed, the state central committee is conducting an active campaign.

Burn Less Fuel— Get More Heat

Just as easily in your old home as though you built a new one. You needn't knock holes in the walls to install this furnace.

Only one register to cut, and no pipes to heat your cellar and destroy its storage value.

We want you to see this wonderful Caloric Furnace, and understand its principle of heating by circulation of air.

This may seem new and revolutionary, but it isn't. It's Nature's own method, and therefore the best. The succeeds because instead of sending warmth slowly through long pipes it lets it rise naturally and unhindered in a great, house filling volume.

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE

The Original Patented Pipeless Furnace

Being direct, this method takes less fuel than any other and gives greater satisfaction. It's guaranteed to heat your home satisfactorily or we take it out at our expense.

We'd like to give you a thorough explanation of its many advantages. Come in and see it. There is no obligation on your part, and we know you will be interested.

A STARTLING TRUTH

ALTHOUGH you may not always be able to earn money; yet you will need money as long as you live. This startling truth should convince everybody of the importance of having money in the bank. FROM CAMP MEADE.

Corporal Middleton Gives Good Report of Garrett Boys.

Oct. 29th, 1917.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Today finds the boys at Camp Meade in good trim and spirits. The drill and exercise is being continually made harder, but it does not prove to be any more tiresome if as much as at first. In spite of the fact that some of the fellows complain of insufficient grub quite a number of the boys are getting stouter. This is especially noticeable in the cases of private Bailey Liston and corporal Paul Liston. We all are about agreed that corporal Paul will some day be a General.

Sergeant Livengood is making a good showing. He complains about not having enough to do to make him tired. Says this is the easiest month he has ever spent in his life. Sergeant Sincell and myself are always getting into trouble for keeping our window open at night. A lot of the fellows here are afraid of the night air.

Corporal Stanton is another fine soldier and bids fair to hold down a better job. His chief trouble is floating. He has a far away look in his eye even when he is standing at attention. We had a visit from two of his brothers Sunday who brought us a cake that lasted ever so short a time.

The camp is much more comfortable now. The stoves, furnaces etc are all in working order and we have hot water as well as cold. Most of the fellows are fully equipped as regards clothing and bedding.

My stay at Camp Meade will be short. Upon examination the other day a slight disturbance was located in the region of my heart and as a result I have been recommended for discharge. I expect to return to Oakland and take up my work in Garrett county again.

With best regards.
Corp. A. G. MIDDLETON.

Moon will be in charge of the singing.

WHY ANNEXATION BILL IS UNFAIR

Above all, because it denies the right of the people to be annexed to vote on the question, which right is guaranteed to them by the Constitution of Maryland.

Because it takes from Baltimore County an area one and one-half times the size of the present city, while one fifth of the present city is still vacant land.

Because it takes away 65,000 of the county's whole population of 139,000, or nearly one-half.

Because it takes away about one-half of the county's whole taxable basis, leaving the whole expense of administration to be saddled upon the remainder of the county.

Because it provides that the county's public buildings within the area proposed to be annexed, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, shall be taken over at what they are worth to the balance of the county after annexation—that is, nothing at all.

Because it provides that all property fronting on the 15 State roads running through the proposed annex shall pay a special paving tax of 15 cents a front foot every year for 10 years. The State built the roads, the city will get the money.

Because it makes no provision for farm lands and woods, which must pay the same rate as built-up ground, and which, in 20 years, will be paying the full city rate—the same as property at Baltimore and Charles streets. The annexation bill of 1888, which was a fair measure, provided for the county rate on such property until it should be given city improvements.

These are the most grossly unfair provisions of the bill, although there are many other features which will work great hardships to the people of the proposed annex. The Democratic party has pledged that this or any other annexation measure should be submitted to the voters of the "Belt," as provided by the Constitution. The Republican party has declared flatly in favor of the Preston-Field Force Bill WITHOUT A REFERENDUM. The only way in which the people of Maryland can prevent this outrage from being perpetrated is to VOTE THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET. We ask you to do this in the the interest of commen honesty and fair dealing. No national issue is to be decided in the election this year ; no sacrifice of party principles is involved.

Labor Conscription . . . . By Frederick J. Haskin

The labor question holds the center of the stage at Washington for the moment. With the assurance of Mr. Hoover that we have turned the corner in the high price problem and the second Liberty Loan campaign already almost a matter of history, the big men are turning a thoughtful glance on the restless field of labor. It is the next big question.

There are strikes and rumors of strikes. There is lack of labor in vital industries. There are demands for higher wages. There are protests against the wages already being paid. Disputes between capital and labor have hindered government work. Even tieups in the government's own yards and shops have not been lacking. And in certain quarters there are those who speak of conscription of labor.

Will there be conscription of labor in the United States? "No conscription of labor without conscription of industry." That is the answer which one gets from authoritative sources—not from any one source, but rather as the consensus of the attitudes of all of them. It is not a formulated policy nor a recognized principle. It is a prevailing state of mind.

"No conscription of labor without conscription of industry," means that if it becomes necessary for the Federal government to conscript labor for service in industries vital to the successful conduct of the war, the government will not be able to stop with the conscription of labor. It will have to take over the industry as well, for the time being. In other words, American labor is not to be drafted for the service of any individual or corporation, even if the individual or corporation is engaged on government war work. If conscription is necessary it will have to be complete.

This statement, which does not indicate a program but is rather a forecast of what an emergency program will be, is based on the opinions of men in very close touch with the situation. They believe that conscription would be repugnant to the sentiment of American working men, that it would not be just, that it is probably unnecessary, and that it would make trouble.

The commonest argument advanced in favor of conscription of labor is the fact that the government drafts men for war service. If you can draft a man to fight, why can't you draft him to work that is just as necessary as fighting? But this puts a double burden on labor. Labor is not exempt from conscription for the Army. Having furnished its quota of soldiers it would probably insist on its right to remain otherwise free. Furthermore, drafting labor for industrial work would be a blow at the position which the working man has been laboriously strengthening for many years.

Military discipline in the Army is an urgent necessity, but when war is over huge army returns to civil life. No precedent has been established by the military rule under which men live in the service. But drafting labor would mean the introduction of the military system into the factory. It would mean in all probability, the temporary suspension of the right to strike, which is labors strongest weapon. That labor in vital industries should not strike in wartime is readily admitted by every local American worker or capitalist. But that labor in any industry should be in a position where it would not dare to strike is a different matter.

How is the problem to be solved? It is admittedly pressing. It will be solved, if a study of the character and utterances of the men who have to deal with it means anything, without resorting to radical means.

It will be solved by remembering that labor and capital are Americans first, and that an appeal to their reason and their patriotism, an offer of mediation of any particular difference coming from a source in which they both have confidence, will be met half way on either side.

Such has been the belief of William B. Wilson, secretary of labor, and consequently the government's policy has been largely shaped accordingly. Mr. Wilson is perhaps the most important figure in the labor situation today. He has handled it with remarkable success so far, and with a minimum of ostentation. Few people realize how many and how serious are the threatened strikes that the mediation of the Department of Labor averts almost daily.

Mr. Wilson is one of the most striking figures in the cabinet. He consistenlty takes the position that every labor dispute has two sides, and that the parties on both sides are reasonable human beings with rights to be respected. Any tendency on the part of capital to exploit labor must be checked; any tendency on the part of labor to make unjust or unreasonable demands must be checked as quickly, but since we live in a democracy these tendencies must be checked, not by an autocratic mandate, but by appealing to the aforementioned reasonable qualities of both parties.

Mr. Wilson is a clear-sighted and plain spoken man, not given to dealing in fervent rhetoric. He looks facts in the face and states his conclusions with cool brevity, no matter how much they might lend themselves to oratorical effect. He does not believe that capital and labor can always live like David and Jonathan, neither does he believe that there is a fundamental conflict between them. The case has never been put more succinctly than when he said the interests of the two parties are mutual but not identical.

W. B. Wilson cannot be called a partisan of labor, although he has been a member of a union for 44 years. His economic theory that capital and labor are mutually indispensable seems to make him consider both on equal terms.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Facing Life's Emergencies

Another of the emergencies we must face is choosing the line of duty. What course ought we to pursue. That little word ought is a mighty one. It expresses something that we must do. If we do not do that thing, then we fall short of our duty. We are faithless, or shirks, or at any rate we are not up to the standard. It takes courage to do our whole duty sometimes, but that is what develops our character and character is what determines destiny. But there is one thing in dividing duty that is often left out of the count.

We think of our own interests. We ask, will this course be the best for us? Shall I succeed in it and make it pay? Well, this is all right, only it does not go far enough. There is something else besides self to be considered. The chief thing is after all something vastly higher than self which if we honestly and conscientiously seek, we shall secure our own best interests always. The chief question then to ask is, will this course glorify God, for after all, the chief end of man's life is to glorify his creator, whether he realizes it or not. The first duty of everyone is to realize this fact. Our refuge is in God. If this is to be a reality, then we must seek first of all the glory of God in our life's work. We must be in right relation to God.

We must see that we are children of God, on His side. We must be with Christ not against Him. We cannot look for the delivering grace of God, if we are not reconciled to him through the Saviour Jesus. Like Abraham we must be the friend of God. Before Jesus came God was worshipped as the creator of the sovereign whose authority must be obeyed. Christ revealed God as Father. He made clear to the world the fatherhood of God. He made it clear that God was our friend, "I have called you friends."

We must have the sense of right under the circumstances. Like Jehosiphat and his people, we want to be where the Lord puts us. We want to be sure our cause is right and just. "If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." We can't ask him to intervene in a cause that is not right.

Another thing. Our attitude must be one of dependence. The Psalmist said: "The Lord is my light and my salvation," 'our eyes are unto thee." "He is my rock and salvation and my defence." If we can honestly say this we may be confident we are in the right way. Then again, our appeal must be to God. We must be in earnest. We are in our life's work. Why not more so in this greatest of all things, that concerns us more than all others. We need to wait upon him, while we wait for Him. Like the Kings, our appeal should be three fold.

First, we may plead our helplessness. Without the divine power we can do nothing. Always alert to exert our power and strength, yet at the same time all is useless without God.

We may then plead the divine power, as well as the divine faithfulness. How do this? Plead the word of the Lord. He is willing to be with us, to guide us, to provide for us, to give victory and reward. Never forget that God is ready to answer the prayers of His people nor need we be greatly affected by numbers or magnitude of the enemy.

Do not overestimate the numbers against us. Majorities are not always safe or right. They may beget confidence and through carelessness and negligence lead to defeat and ruin. It is quality not quantity; spirit not might; character not numbers that tells.

Better Gideons 300 than the entire army. Every thing depends on having the Lord on our side, or better still, on our being on the Lord's side. If like the King we are assured that God has made our cause His own; that His presence is with us; and that we have the divine assurance of salvation, then are we sure He will work for us. Knowing that our fight is the Lord's and that He will give the issue we may confidently say, let the hosts come. From the experience of the King, we may learn, that we must be ready to take our part, to do our bit. We must let ourselves, stand still and see the Salvation of the Lord—that is, see how He will help us to success. No doubt some then, would feel like running away. There were cowards then as there are now. But some of the bravest men are oft times full of fear. Others would want to rush in, but it was enough for the obedient and trustful to stand still. Our enemies often dispose of one another. The Shinei's may throw stones at us or falsely accuse us, but they do us no harm. Let them blasphem and attack our religion, that is only reason for our being more faithful and positive in our work of hastening the kingdom.

The evil we fear is more than balanced by the good we gain. When they come back from Tekoa laden with spoil, they would feel better to have the agitation followed by success, than not to have had the invasion of the enemy.

Dangers disappear and things that threaten us bring blessings to us. Only be sure that you are on the Lord's side and this can only be attained by our surrender to Him and His service. Choose righteousness rather than selfishness. The church is against the three fold power of the world, the flesh and the devil. The hostitily of world powers is illustrated by the combination against Judah. Your best defense is piety and prayer.

My reader, you are face to face with the greatest emergency of life viz: the choice or rejection of Jesus as your Saviour. Let them be the prudent resolve to seek the Lord. Do not overestimate your own powers. Neither do you underestimate the strength of the temptations that beset you. By all means do not ignore the word of God. Accept Christ, take up His cross, press on in faith with courage and yours shall be the victory. JOANNES.

BALTIMORE HELPLESS IN RACE TO EXCEL IN POPULATION.

Its Pleasant Homes, Beautiful Women and Manly Men, and Its Wealth Of Solid Advantages Always Will Keep it Famous.

(Prepared by the Baltimore County Non-Partisan Citizens' Protective Committee.)

One of the arguments which the advocates of annexation find most potent with the people of the counties is that they want to better the standing of Baltimore among the leading cities of the country. This appeals to all the people of the State, because of their natural feeling of pride in Maryland. A study of the census figures by the stay-at-homes and a little travel by rolling stones dispels the pretty dream that the Monumental City, pleasant place as it is to live in, can ever outstrip such cities as Cleveland, St. Louis and Chicago, or hold its own in the race with the manufacturing centres of the Middle West.

Baltimore will ever stand first in the estimation of the world as the city of homes, the home of beautiful women and gallant and courteous men, the centre of conservatism in finance, the chief port of entry of the terrapin, the oyster, the crab and the canvas-back duck and various other things which make life worth living and the mere vulgar struggle for wealth and position things to be despised, but, while it is likely to maintain its position and rank among the leading cities on the Atlantic seaboard, it cannot expect to retain seventh place in competition with such vulgar and sordid towns as Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and St. Louis. It is better so, for what true Marylander or other gentleman of the old regime would throw away the rose to run after the cabbage?

Baltimore Seventh In 1910.

According to the Census of 1910, Baltimore stood seventh in the list of American cities, those ahead of her being New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston and Cleveland. As all of these showed from twice to five times the percentage of gain shown by Baltimore in the decade 1900-1910, and are still growing rapidly, it is manifestly impossible for the Monumental City to catch up with them. Cleveland, the next city above Baltimore in the list, showed a decennial increase of 46.9 per cent., while that of Baltimore was 9.7. If Baltimore were to annex the whole of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, Cleveland probably would still be ahead of her in 1920, for Cleveland also has suburbs to annex.

Five Other Cities In Race.

There are five cities in the race with Baltimore to hold seventh place or better in the Census of 1920. They are Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo, San Francisco-Oakland and Los Angeles. The United States Census Bureau has prepared a table showing the population of cities of 200,000 inhabitants or more in 1910, with the population of their suburbs, not under the city government but of a strictly urban character, and the percentage of growth 1900-1910. These suburbs are in each case combined with the city and called the Metropolitan District. Here are the figures:

District	Population	Per Cent Increase
Baltimore	658,715	14.0
Pittsburgh	1,042,855	31.5
Detroit	566,982	57.1
Buffalo	488,661	24.6
San Francisco-Oakland..	686,873	45.2
Los Angeles	458,226	256.1

Pittsburgh and Boston's Suburbs.

It is apparent that Pittsburgh, by annexing her suburbs, can at once jump to fifth place in the list of American cities—fourth place, unless Boston, with a population of 670,585, should also annex the 849,855 inhabitants of her suburbs, giving her a population of 1,520,470. Let us take the six districts in the list and see what their respective enumeration will be in 1920, based upon the percentage of increase 1900-1910:

District	Population
Baltimore	750,925
Pitsburgh	1,371,354
Detroit	787,042
Buffalo	605,467
San Francisco-Oakland	997,339
Los Angeles	1,560,522

Will Lead Buffalo.

It will be seen that annexation presents no possible hope for Baltimore to either better her standing or hold her own. At the rate of increase shown, all the above metropolitan districts will pass Baltimore by 1920, except Buffalo. Detroit is even now claiming 750,000 population. All of these cities are growing rapidly and there is no reason to think the percentage of increase will not hold good with all of them, except the phenomenal one of Los Angeles. But Los Angeles is claiming 1,000,000 people by 1920.

The opponents of annexation claim that the idea of attracting business enterprises by a show of population is a fallacy. Those seeking factory sites, they say, are influenced by transportation facilities, ease of access to raw materials and favorable laws and municipal regulations, including assessment and taxation. Because of the advantages presented by them on these lines, the suburban sections have, they claim, been a godsend to Baltimore City.

How will annexation help the State? Will it cause the erection of an additional building in Maryland?

CIVIC CLUB WORK

A Most Interesting Paper By Mrs. G. Semmes Hamill.

At a meeting of the Oakland Civic Club, held on Tuesday afternoon of this week, much was done by the members that will be of interest to the people of the town and county generally.

An order was passed directing that two Liberty Loan Bonds of $50 each be purchased which affords a good investment for the funds on hand as well as showing the patriotic spirit of the members.

Early in the spring the Club offered several prizes to children who would cultivate gardens, the awards to be be made at the end of the season. Forty entries were recorded at the outset. Roland Michael, of near town seems to have been the only boy of the forty who persevered and as a result he was awarded the prize of $6.00 offered.

Mrs. G. Semmes Hamill read a highly interesting paper on "Food Conservation," and at the request of the members of the Club it is given space in these columns. Mrs. Hamill's paper follows:

Women of the Oakland Civic Club:

Mrs. Sliger, your Prisident, has asked me to say a few words to you about the campaign of food conservation now being carried on. A short time ago anything materialistic as food (dear as it may be to the hearts of us all) would have seemed a strange subject to choose to talk about before a body of women whose purpose in meeting is for mental stimulation and civic betterment. But times have changed. You will notice that I address you as "women," rather than ladies, for it is to the WOMEN of America this great message to conserve food is being sent and the word women these days is synonymous with work.

With one decisive blow war has struck off the fetters of tradition which bound women and has cast her bodily into the ocean of life to sink or swim. That she is not going to sink, but has struck out boldly for her country and herself is clearly shown in the fine patriotic examples set by American women in their response given everywhere when the U. S. entered the war. War has brough the passing of that feminine type known as the "clinging vine." To-day women have taken a bite of the fruit forbidden,—not by God—but by man and with the eating thereof has come the revelation of what she really can do. When war clouds first began to gather 10,000 American women offered their service to the Government in case of sudden National need, and now that America is actually at war woman's ability and feminine preparedness may be looked upon as the country's first line of defense.

As in the days gone by when American women helped suppress the Tory and Indian guerillas, even at times working in the thickest of battles as gun loaders, so our European sisters are now taking their places in the firing line. Hundreds of women are fighting in the Russian army, notable among them Madame Kontasheva, a woman of great culture and refinement, a writer, a poetess, and a musician of note. Three other Russian women, one a high school girl, have received the Order of St. George for distinguished service at the front. Italy has her brave women warriors, and in Serbia the organization known as the Legion of Death, composed entirely of trained women warriors who are expert rifle shots, is especially feared and hated by the Germans and Austrians. But we cannot all be in the firing line; we cannot all be Red Cross nurses at the front. There are some of us whose duties in our homes and on our farms are too numerous for us to spare much time to even sew for the Red Cross. What can we do? The reply like the clear note of a clarion is heard throughout the entire land. Mr. Hoover's message: Let the women in the homes now do their part by reducing the consumption of those articles of food needed not only by the allies but by OUR OWN BOYS, physicians, nurses and other brave war workers "over there." Use LESS wheat, use LESS meat, use LESS sugar, use LESS fats (butter, lard, etc.) Use MORE corn meal, more fish (when obtainable), more vegetables, more syrups—DON'T WASTE.

There is an abundance of those foods in the United States. We must then be willing to send the food across the 3,000 submarine-menaced miles that require the least tonnage in proportion to their nutritive value. This is the nucleus of the message. Nearly all fruits and many vegetables are useless for export so let us feast on them at home. We have bumper crops of corn and oats. Our wheat crop this year is short, yet we must send across the ocean in 1918 one billion bushels of wheat and it takes 77,000,000 acres to produce this amount. The food animals of the allies have decreased 33,000,000 head since the war began, thus the cource of their meat production is decreasing, at the same time the needs of the soldiers and war workers have increased the necessary meat consumption. And if we are to win this war this need must KEEP increasing.

The war has laid waste large areas of agriculture lands in France and Belgium. Before the war Italy and Belgium produced just enough sugar to supply their needs, while England drew most of her supply from what are now enemy countries. France and Italy can produce but little now. Everywhere instead of fertile fields of waving grain grim munitions factories now stand. In addition there is the U-boat menace. If a cargo is sunk there must be another to replace it. Let us remember that every flag that flies opposite the German flag is by proxy the American flag and that the armies fighting under them cannot be maintained unless there is food for them. There can only be enough food if America provides it. America cannot provide it without the personal and patriotic service of the American housewife.

Ninety per cent. of the food consumption is in the hands of women, the other 10 per cent. in the hands of hotels and restaurants. These latter persons are all willing to co-operate with the Government in food conservation. The women of America should feel thrilled at the personal message Mr. Hoover is sending to each one. "The war will not be won by the soldiers in the trenches alone but BY THE second line of defense behind the trenches—Women are that line and Maryland expects EVERY WOMAN to do her duty."

Because our Government considers it contrary to the laws of democracy to deal out our rations as they do in Europe, it has been decided to embark on this campaign of conservation and substitution. If this campaign is a success, it will be the strongest proof of the ability of democracy to defend itself without force. If the campaign is NOT a success (I feel at liberty to quote a certain high authority, Mr. Francis King Carey) our rations WILL be dealt out to us as the Government sees fit.

That the campaign in Maryland will be an overwhelming success I have not the slightest doubt after attending the inspiring meeting at the Lyric in Baltimore last Saturday afternoon. The earnest simple words of Mr. Hoover met with profound attention and enthusiasm, and the way the vast audience led by the entire Peobody Chorus sang the Battle Hymn of the Republic was enough to make the most impatriotic person long to do or die. When 8,000 women are in perfect unity something is bound to happen.

In talking to some of the army of representative Maryland women, I found they had no criticism to make of the organization, no fault to find with their allotted duties, but only an overwhelming desire to do their very best.

Judge Stockbridge's wife, a white haired woman of the old school type, told me she had been appointed captain of the colored wards in a downtown part of the City and "though" she said, "I thought at first I could not possibly do it, I am proud to say it is now one of the best organized wards in the City." That is the true spirit of democracy and patriotism. Each woman of the Oakland Civic Club will, I hope, hear Mr. Hoover's message just as clearly as the women in the other clubs in other counties and cities. I want Garrett county to show Maryland that as her women have given sons, brothers and sweethearts, so now will they do their part in this great work of food conservation.

POSTAGE INCREASE EFFECTIVE FRIDAY

First Class Matter Principally Affected—Tax on Messages.

The increased war rates on postage provided for letters, postal cards and the war tax on telegrams goes into effect Friday, November 2.

Following is the complete scale or prices: Letters and other first class matter, except drop letters and postals and post cards, will be subject at the rate of three cents for each ounce of fraction thereof, which should be fully prepaid. If less than three cents is paid on a letter or other first class matter, it shall be returned to the sender, if known for the deficient postage. If the sender is not known it shall, if prepaid at least two cents, be rated with the deficient postage and dispatched to its destination for collection of the amount due upon delivery to the address. The rate on drop letters, will be two cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce. This applies to all letters mailed for delivery within the postal district of the office where deposited, including delivery by the city rural, or other carriers of such office. The two cent drop letter rate also applies to offices which have no free delivery service.

All postal cards whether they bear written messages or entirely in print, must be prepaid two cents each, and therefore the one cent postal cards must have a one cent postage stamp affixed to them in addition to the one cent stamp impressed on such cards.

Post cards, or private mailing cards, bearing written messages will also be subject two-cent postage each.

The rates of postage is not affected on printed cards the words "post card" or "private mailing card" which do not bear any written additions authorized on third class matter, such printed cards still being subject to postage at the third-class rate can be forwarded from office of original address to another post office without a new prepayment of postage. Failure to prepay the proper amount of postage will delay the dispatch and delivery of mail.

Beginning with November 1, a tax of 5 cents must be paid, in addition to the tolls, on each telegram or telephone message originating in the Unedti States, the tolls on which are 15 cents or more.

The tax on paid messages will be paid by the sender. The tax on collect messages will be paid by the addressee.

Five cent taxes will be imposed on full rate telegrams, night messages, day letters, night letters, cablegrams, full rate and deferred, cable letters, week-end letters, wireless or radio messages of all classes, press messages, when tolls amount to 15 cents or more, money transfer messages which originated in the United States.

THE DEATH RECORD.

JESSE M. ENGLEHART.

Jesse M. Englehart, superintendent of the Englehart Woolen Mills at Albright, Preston county, W. Va., died at the home of his brother in Braddock, Pa., Thursday afternoon after a short illness. Mr. Englehart went to Pittsburgh a week ago Thursday in apparently good health, and while there contracted pneumonia. He went to the home of his brother at Braddock, and there his death occurred a week later.

Mr. Englehart was about 45 years of age, and is survived by his wife and five children, as follows: Mrs. Hugh Feather, of Morgantown; Miss Hollis Englehart, who is in school, and Burel, Hazel and Oscar Englehart, who live at home.

The body was taken to Albright by automobile from Braddock, and funeral services were conducted at the Centenary Church at Albright Monday afternoon.

The deceased was born at Accident, this county, being a son of the late John Englehart.

MARTIN V. FLANAGAN.

Another of Garrett countys old veterans has answered the roll call in the person of our mutual friend and fellow towns man Martin V. Flanagan.

After a stroke of paralysis which lasted a few days he was called Friday, October twenty sixth. He leaves a wife and son to mourn their loss. The funeral services were held at his home Sunday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Frank McCamic, of the M. E. church. A number of Masons, of which he was one, were present.

The body then laid in state until Monday morning when it was taken to Oakland escorted by the Masons. He was buried beside his daughter in the I. O. O. F. cemetery.

The subject of this sketch was born in Harrison county (Va., now W. Virginia) June 15, 1843. In 1862 he joined the Federal Army. After taking part in many of the battles of his native state, he was transferred to the army of the Shenandoah. He was with General Hunter and participated in the battle of Lynchburg, Va., and after the retreat of General Hunter he was moved east, and transferred to General Sheridans army in the Valley of Virginia and was with the gallant Sheridan during the stirring scenes of 1864, and participated in the battle of Winchester, Cedar Creek, and different engagements in the vicinity of Harrisonburg.

After the war he located at Deer Park, and was a trusted emplovee of the late Henry G. Davis. By his industry and fugal habits, he accumulated enough to buy a nice farm in the vicinity of Deer Park. In later life he was happily married to Miss Riley. Two children were born to this union, viz: Walter and Alma. The latter died as she was mergeing into young womanhood.

After years of toil on this farm he built a nice home in the town of Deer Park, leaving his son to manage the farm. He and his wife retired from the farm to spend the remainder of their lives in Deer Park.

On Tuesday evening of last week a storm swooped down upon us, and during that night and the following day snow fell to a considerable depth which was blown together into such deep drifts at places, as to blocade the roads for a day or two.

THE GREAT SOUTHWEST

Mr. Cheuvront Writes From Tulsa, Oklahoma, Where He Is Located.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Oklahoma and the southwest is so unlike I had pictured it, and so unlike any other country I thought a little description might be of interest to your readers.

It will be impossible for me to describe this country so that one can appreciate it in its full sense.

The country consists of great wide level praries and gently rolling hills, diversified with rivers and smaller streams. There is little timber in any section except along the streams. One of the principal trees being the Pecan, which bears the pecan nuts that are sold in the markets. There is a fine crop of pecans this year.

Cattle and hogs are raised in this section but not in as large numbers as I thought. Cotton, corn, caffir corn and wheat are grown in many places, but were almost a failure this year on account of the dry season and early frosts. There was a big white frost here the day I landed, Oct. 22, and it has been cold enough for an overcoat ever since until today, which is a very beautiful warm day. The air is dry and clear, there being no wind, which is not usual.

The cities and towns of this country are the great surprise to me. Some that I have visited are Okmulgee, about 25,000 population, 150 miles south of the Kansas line; Sapulpa, about 15,000 population, 125 miles south of the Kansas line; Tulsa, about 70,000 population, 100 miles south of the Kansas line. I also visited a number of towns in Southern Kansas, the largest being Wichita, with a population of about 65,000, and ElDorado with a population of about 10,000 people. This is the town where they are getting the fifteen thousand to twenty-five thousand barrel wells that has set all the middle west crazy over the oil business. I will write you a full description of this field in my next letter.

I was speaking of the population of these various towns that you may better appreciate the fast development of this country.

Tulsa is the leading town in Oklahoma. Many of the business buildings are from 10 to 12 stories high, several sky scrapers now building. The building permits amount to one million dollars per month. The streets are all cement and asphalt top, which makes one of the very best highways.

Tulsa has two street car systems. Neither are up to the town's needs. The school system is claimed to be as good as the best. They no longer build three or four story buildings for schools but one story with basement. A chain of these buildings are built around the entire square. The inside is left for play ground where there is no danger from vehicles. The one story buildings make fire less dangerous, and lets in sun light on the play ground. While they in a measure shut off the wind.

The banks are full of money, one bank having eighteen million on deposit. The daily clearance of the banks is more than one million.

Tulsa has 5500 men whose income is more than $3,000 per year and many men whose income is more than $100,000 per year. It has the distinction of being the richest city in the world.

The people who are largely made up of easterners, are sociable for rich folks and are all boosters for the West, and especially for Tulsa. If you don't start boosting when you land here you had better start home.

The money all came easy in the oil gamble and the people will gamble on anything that happens along. You would hardly believe one could gamble on U. S. bonds. They are doing it here, selling them by the thousands in the hotels and on the street and most all in a gamble. The bonds sold are from $50.00 to $1000. To illustrate: A fifty dollar bond is up; 50 paddles are sold with numbers from one to fifty, there is from 1 to 50 on the dial or ring around the revolving pointer or hand. Wherever the hand stops the party holding that number get the bond by paying $1 to $2 extra. Do they sell them? I should say they do. I saw some fellows making a sale every three minutes. Two of the $1000.00 bonds sold here in the hotel last night in that way were immediately transferred by the winner to the Red Cross, so you see they are not gambling for money. They do not need it but are gambling for amusement.

When I write next week I will tell you about the great oil field of El Dorado, hotel life in Oklahoma and the advantages offered by this country.

Money is very plentiful here and the opportunities are open to any and all who care to come into the game.

Yours very truly,
J. B. CHEUVRONT.

ATTENTION, VOTERS.

Having been nominated on the Democratic ticket for Sheriff of Garrett county, I take this means of soliciting the votes and support of the people in the several districts whom I may not be able to interview personally before election day.

I am a young man, 35 years of age, strong and healthy, and believe, with the majority of the people of the county, that this office should be in the hands of a man of this kind. If honored with election to this important office, I pledge myself to bend every effort to administer same honestly, fearlessly and to the best interests of the people of the county as a whole.

Again soliciting your vote and influence, and trusting for a favorable comparison with my opponent I beg to remain,

SCHOOLS FACE CRISIS

Shortage of Teachers Seriously Affects Schools in the Counties.

State Superintendent of Schools, M. Bates Stephens, reports that a serious danger confronts the pubbic schools on account of properly qualified teachers. The many new departments created by the national government in the conduct of the war, as well as the hundreds of vacancies in Baltimore and the larger towns caused by the absence of men in military service have created an unceasing demand for office and other help, and the liberal salaries offered have induced hundreds of Maryland's best teachers to forsake educational work. The situation is particularly acute in counties adjoining the larger industrial centers and Washington. In Montgomery county more than fifty teachers have resigned since May, and in Anne Arundel, and several other counties, the superintendents are unable to find enough teachers to open all the schools.

Since May six principals of approved high schools have entered military service and as many have resigned their positions to take up other work. As most high school teachers in the counties are women, it has been especially hard to find suitable candidates for the vacant principalships. The commercial and manual training deparments of the high schools have also suffered severe loss. Only for the academic subjects has the supply of eigh school teachers been equal to the demand.

While living expenses were relatively low, and not so many other avenues of employment were open, it was comparatively easy to find teachers for all the schools. Today, girls with less than high school education have little difficulty in securing positions in business offices and government bureaus at twice the salary their teacher receives. As a result teachers are leaving the schools to go into other lines of work, and since fewer young men and women are now in colleges and other schools preparing for teaching, it is a serious question with school authorities how the schools may be kept open and up to the standard.

The great need of the public schools of Maryland for years has been properly qualified teachers, trained especially for service in the one and two-teachers school, with a desire to live in the country. To render the best service in country schools, teachers need to be specially fitted to meet rural life problems. They must be rural minded, with an interest in the country community and its institutions, and must have a good capocity for initiative and leadership; and while this need has never been adequately met, a good beginning has been made under the progressive school legislation passed by the last sessions of the General Assembly. Following the report of the Maryland Educational Survey Commission, the Legislature of 1916 passed laws providing for many improvements in the State School System, which have given Maryland the credit for having the best school legislation of any state in the Union. Just as this law is getting into operation, there is extreme danger that its high standards set up in the interest of the school children of Maryland may be nullified through the lack of teachers who measure up to former standards.

The underlying cause for the lack of adequately trained teachers is a general apathy towards the needs of the schools and a mistaken notion of economy in public school support. Over three thousand teachers in the counties of Maryland are paid the minimum salaries permitted by law. With the increasing cost of living, and the other avenues of employment open to teachers, more money must be available for teacher's salaries if the schools are to be kept up to former standards. In no other way will teachers be able to continue making the necessary preparation for their work, and meet the expenses for further improvement while teaching.

$35,000,000 FOR WAR Y. M. C. A.

Organization Formed to Raise Garrett County Share of Fund.

A group of Oakland citizens met in the offices of Renninger & Offutt last Saturday afternoon to talk over preliminaries looking to an organized movement to raise this county's share of the $35,000,000 needed to carry on the work of the Y. M. C. A. in the United States army cantonments and camps at home and "over seas." The meeting was addressed by Mr. W. C. REPUBLICANS WILL CONTROL LEGISLATURE ON JOINT BALLOT

They Will Have Working Majority in the House With One Vote Short in the Senate

Hugh A. McMullen, Democratic candidate for Comptroller, was re-elected Comptroller, at the election on Tuesday, by a majority somewhat in excess of 1,000, as compared with over 6,000 two years ago.

This enormous reduction in Mr. McMullen's majority is in itself a great triumph by the Republicans. If the Republicans of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties had voted in the same proportion as did the Democrats in those counties, Mr. Atwood, Republican, would have been elected. His election would still have been possible if Allegany county Republicans had stood up for him this year as well as they stood up for Mr. Duer two years ago.

The Republicans will control the House of Delegates by at least eight majority. By this majority the Republicans will have a majority on the joint ballot of the two houses and will elect a Republican treasurer to succeed John M. Dennis, Democrat. They will be one short of a majority in the Senate, control of which body was lost by the failures of Republicans in Charles and St. Marys, both Republicans under normal conditions, to make good.

REPUBLICANS ARE AGAIN VICTORIOUS

Every Candidate Receives Splendid Endorsement at Polls.

The Republican ticket nominated at the primary election in September last went to victory at the Garrett county polls on Tuesday with substantial majorities for every candidate.

For the third consecutive time Senator Harvey J. Speicher was elected to represent Garrett county in Maryland's Upper Branch of the Legislature, notwithstanding the bitterness engendered by the primary fight when methods were used by his opponents to injure him in every conceivable manner.

The members for the House of Delegates, Messrs. N. R. Selby, E. A. Weimer and A. T. White were especially fortunate. In each instance the candidates entered the primary at a late date where they were endorsed by the voters and at the election on Tuesday they ran neck and neck, Mr. White leading with a few votes; Selby second and Weimer a good third. They were opposed by but one candidate on the opposition ticket, Mr. Daniel W. Dorsey, of Grantsville, who also made a good showing when it is considered that the Democratic vote in Garrett county is small at the best.

Mr. Tower, for the Clerk of the Circuit Court; Mr. Kimmell, for County Treasurer, and Mr. Meyers for Clerk of the Board of Commissioners were unopposed and they received the votes of both Democrats and Republicans.

The Commissioners will be Messrs. George D. Browning and Henry P. Miller both of whom are popular with the voters and are considered by the public as business men of more than ordinary ability.

Mr. George D. White, of Oakland, is the successful candidate for Sheriff. He defeated Mr. Lee R. Mason, also of Oakland, although the latter felt fairly confident of his election to the office.

A tabulated vote of the various districts in the county will be found elsewhere in this paper today, subject, however, to correction when the official canvas is made by the Supervisors sometime today.

LAST CONTINGENT TO CAMP MEADE

Forty-one New Men From Garrett Go For Training

Garrett county's final contingent of selected men, numbering forty-one, were given a hearty farewell by hundreds of people who assembled at the railroad station in Oakland Tuesday afternoon where the men took train No. 46 for Camp Meade to undergo a training lasting several months to fit them for the stern realities which confront them.

Monday evening the men were given a farewell reception at the Maryland theatre where addresses were made by Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, representing the Garrett County Committee of Defense, Prof. C. E. Bender and also by the Rev. Dr. U. S. Wright, of Mountain Lake Park. Others upon the stage were Mr. W. R. Offutt, representing the Y. M. C. A., and Rev. W. M. Shultz.

Mr. Bender's address was along historical lines and was interesting and instructive.

Mr. Hamill reviewed the work done and being done by the Red Cross Society of the Nation and county. He called upon everyone present to give the noble women the support due them in their work for humanity and made an especial appeal to the patriotism of his audience. He introduced Rev. Dr. Wright whose address was one of interest. In it the speaker warned the soldiers of the temptations that would assail them in camp and abroad and appealed to their better natures to keep themselves free of all moral crimes.

The high school students rendered some excellent vocal music during the meeting.

Those who left Tuesday afternoon were the following:

Million Letters In the Mails Today Bearing Magic Words "With the Colors"

Keynote of the Splendid Work the Y. M. C. A. Does Among Our Men In Uniform Is Keeping Them In Touch With the Folks at Home.

STAMPED WITH STARS AND STRIPES AND RED TRIANGLE

Multifarious Ways in Which the Association Appeals to Your Boy, Your Neighbor's Boy, or Some Boy You Know and Love—Creates a Helpful Environment in Cantonment, on Way Overseas, in Front Line Trench and Beyond—First to Aid as He Comes Tottering Back—Give Your Share of the $35,000,000 Required to Accomplish This "Last Evidence That Somebody Cares."

IT was evening on the broad Hempstead Plain, Long Island, where the Rainbow division was spending its last night before embarking for France. It had been raining hard in the afternoon—a cold, steady autumn downpour—and there was nothing to suggest the rainbow in the outward aspect of the camp. Lines and lines of sodden canvas housed 27,000 men, gathered from 27 different states. The ground was dotted with pools and quagmires. Under the wet canvas it was damp and cold, with a penetrating chill. Lit by flickering candles, the tents were far from cheerful shelter for a man's last night in his native land.

But there were seven big tents where electric lights, numbers and friendliness made the night pleasant.

Music, Games, Good Reading and Correspondence Facilities in Y. M. C. A. Building.

In each of these a soldier was strumming on a piano; others were reading books and magazines; hundreds were writing letters home. Behind the raised counter at one end three or four young men were busy passing out notepaper and envelopes, selling stamps and weighing parcels, which the men were sending home. One of the soldiers said to me as I stood in the tent used chiefly by men from Iowa: "We came all the way here from Des Moines, and we were mighty lonely. Then we found this Y. M. C. A. on the job, and it's been a home and more than a home to us. It gave us what we wanted when we needed it most. We'll never forget it. The boys' best friend is the Y. M. C. A."

Fine, Clean-Cut, Upstanding Fellows.

How close those benches were packed with men, bending over the long tables absorbed in their writing! What an appeal to the sympathies those great groups of soldiers make! Fine, clean-cut, upstanding fellows, some of them mere boys, one thinks immediately of the sacrifice they have made for the rest of us and how precious they are to some one back home. Somewhere, in far off farm or village or city street, there are parents or brothers or wives who would give all they possess for one glimpse of those sunburned faces as you and I see them on their last night before going across. And it was with a throb of the heart that I watched them, bent over their letter paper, in one after another of those seven big tents.

These were the tents of the Y. M. C. A. On that last night in America the association was serving the soldiers in the best of all ways—giving them an opportunity to write home. On previous nights they had enjoyed boxing bouts, movies, concerts, dramatics and a score of healthy entertainments as well as religious meetings. But on this last night home ties were strongest. And perhaps that is the keynote of the splendid work the Y. M. C. A. is doing among our men in uniform—keeping them in touch with home.

Magic Words, "With the Colors."

In these times there are some letters that mean more to us than any we have ever read before. They are written on sheets of paper stamped with the Stars and Stripes and the red triangle of the Y. M. C. A., and they bear the magic words, "With the Colors." There are many more than a million such letters in the mails now while you read this. Perhaps one at least is on its way to you. Each one of our 16 cantonments, where the new national army is being trained, is using more than a million sheets of this paper every month. In the draft army alone that means 16,000,000 filaments of love every month reaching out from the great encampment where the men are being trained into the greatest army this nation has ever dreamed and binding them to the hearts at home. Multiply that by thinking of all the other places where Uncle Sam has men with the flag—in navy yards, on the high seas, in arsenals and officers' training camps and "Over There" in France. In all these places men are writing home. Those unassuming little sheets of notepaper gladden millions of hearts a day. They transfer more love from one part of the world to another than statistics can express. Statistics are pretty poor anyway when it comes to reckoning in terms of love and human tenderness. Let's put it this way: That the Y. M. C. A. is the biggest express company the world has ever seen, and the parcels it is handling are the loves and devotions of human beings.

World's Best Loved Trademark.

This war has made us think hard and fast. Your boy or your neighbor's boy or some boy you know and love has been called to do his share in the big job of policing the world for democracy and human liberty. Is it any comfort to you to know that wherever his duty may call him your boy will have a friend that will serve him in body, mind and soul? Are you glad to know that this friend will place books and magazines at his disposal, organize classes to teach him whatever he wants to learn, give him a pocket testament and invite him to join religious meetings of the faith that he was brought up in? Did you realize that the association provides athletic equipment for his favorite games, teaches him games if he knows none and holds concerts, lectures, movies, Bible classes, dramatic entertainments and every kind of wholesome amusement to keep him interested? Are you glad to know that this friend will go with him overseas, help to shield him from a score of difficult and dangerous temptations and follow him right up to the front line trench and beyond it? The last contact the soldier has with this life he loves so well is a cup of tea given him by the Y. M. C. A. free just before he goes "over the top" to a hand to hand struggle with the enemy. And as he comes tottering back from No Man's Land, wounded, but strong enough and plucky enough to keep on his feet, even before his wounds are dressed the Y. M. C. A. is waiting for him with tea and sweet chocolate, the great comforts of the man in the trenches. Do you wonder that the Red Triangle is called "the best loved trademark in the world?" One soldier in France has called it "the last evidence that anybody cares."

If every thinking citizen could see with his or her own eyes something of the actual work being done for our men by the association there would be no question of the Y. M. C. A. having to appeal to the public for money. Rather than let this essential work falter for an instant rich men would sell their motorcars, poor men would forego coveted possessions or even necessities. The work must go on, because there is no one thing that contributes so much to the spirit and efficiency of the troops. The Y. M. C. A. is working night and day to help the government win this war. And every penny that is given to aid the work is a direct assistance to the health, happiness and strength of your boy and mine.

Snapshots of Kaleidoscopic Work.

In all the big cities in France where our men pass through in large numbers, the Y. M. C. A. is operating hostels, where they can get beds and meals at a minimum cost. In London the American Y. M. C. A. has erected a large building for our soldiers and a clubhouse for American officers.

There are Y. M. C. A. dugouts right behind the front line trenches, where the soldiers can get hot drinks, crackers and other comforts at all hours.

Over 2,000 men who had been rejected on account of physical disability have been able to get into the British army by reason of the physical work of the British Y. M. C. A.

A fleet of motor cars leaves the big Y. M. C. A. headquarters in London at midnight every night to pick up soldiers who are wandering about the streets without any wholesome lodging in which to spend the night. These cars are operated by Englishwomen of position and refinement, who report that they never meet any discourtesy at the hands of the soldiers. The importance of this service can be estimated by the fact that at least 50,000 soldiers are on leave in London every week. Over half of these sleep in Y. M. C. A. beds every night.

Entertainment on Vast Scale.

The Y. M. C. A. has erected a big auditorium, seating 3,000, in each of the big draft camps, and huge chautauqua tents, seating 2,500 in the other encampments. The association is running a 22 week entertainment circuit among the camps and is paying 16 companies of entertainers, who are traveling to 30 camps performing before the men.

In each of the draft camps the Y. M. C. A. has ten secretaries engaged in educational work. The association is seeing to it that every man who cannot speak English is taught to do so. In many of the camps the association has a singing director, who is teaching the men to sing the popular and martial airs that do so much to keep up their spirits.

Of 64 Y. M. C. A. men at Camp Dix only three are being paid full salaries. In all the camps the majority of the Y. M. C. A. men have left lucrative positions to do this work simply because its appeal is irresistible to any red blooded man. Harry Lauder, the famous Scotch singer and comedian, now on his farewell concert tour in the United States, is giving all his spare time to the service of the association and is singing to the soldiers at all the camps he can reach.

In one of the draft camps the Y. M. C. A. is supervising athletics on 120 playing fields, providing full athletic equipment. The winners of the interregimental games will play the champions of the other camps.

One of the greatest services rendered by the association is the making out of money orders by which the men can send their pay home to their families. In some of the big camps the Y. M. C. A. is providing banking facilities for the men as well.

Do Your Bit With a Tenner.

This month (November) the Y. M. C. A. must raise $35,000,000 to carry on its work among our soldiers and their allies until next July. Of this $35,000,000 about $24,000,000 will be spent on the work with our own troops or about $10 for every man in Uncle Sam's uniform. If everybody who has received letters from soldiers and sailors were to contribute $10 the task would be easy. Are your boy's health and happiness and clean soul worth $10 to you?

Your town mayor, your pastor, your school superintendent will know who is the treasurer of the campaign committee in your county or town. Otherwise send a check or money order to Cleveland H. Dodge, treasurer, 124 East Twenty-eighth street, New York city.

Only sacrificial giving by millions of givers will make possible the continuance of this vast work for American soldiers and for those of our allies

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

The Security of Christians.

There is a striking declaration in 1 Sam. 2:9 to the effect, "He will keep the feet of His saints." That is God, the holy and Being, the just and true God, the all wise and powerful creator, the tender and loving Father, will guide the feet of the pious—that is one lovingly disposed toward God. He will guide the earthly course of each one that loves Him, but over against this ever watchful providence, exerted for the safe keeping of all who love the right stand God's punitive justice, whereby the wicked are finally brought down to the silence of the grave. The reason they had only human strength and prowess to depend upon, and no man can sustain himself in the manifold conflict of life without help from above. His saints are not those canonized and who are supposed to have power in heaven to influence God in granting petitions presented on earth. They are those who have been accepted of God through Jesus, and who do his will and walk in the way to heaven. Their way is often difficult and painful like the uneven paths of Palestin, and beset with dangers. But for consolation and encouragement it is promised that He will keep their feet firm and safe so they may not fall and perish.

It is a direct promise of preservation from temporal calamity, but it may include also spiritual failure or destruction. It should humble us, for we dare not think that without fulfilling his commandments we shall be kept or receive the benefit of the promises. Here a condition is implied therefore use the means of grace. He will guide the earthly course of each of His own. We may count on being kept clean. He purifies them, takes away the dross—hence the furnace is a necessity. Afflictions, trials, troubles are good. But we are only kept in the furnace long enough to cleanse us. Israel was kept by the Lord when in Egypt, though it seemed so dark. They needed that experience. It was hard, but it took heroic measures for the disease. The Egyptian experience was needed to cleanse them. The psalmist prayed "cleanse me from secret faults," "cleanse me from sin." He cleanses us from unrighteousness so that we are counted pure in his sight.

He will keep the saints feet shod. The way is rugged, so we need preparation for our feet for the way. Shoes wear out, feet get sore, but God keeps them shod. When the twelve were sent out they were to be shod with sandals. So the angel said to Peter when delivered from prison, "gird on thy sandals." In Eph. 6.15 we get the meaning of the sandals. The preparation or the readiness of the gospel or glad tidings of peace. This can only be secured by warning against his enemies. "He will keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Him."

In some respects the way to heaven is safe, in others it is dangerous. It is through a land of enemies and deserts and beset with difficulties. We are weak so enemies would push us down. Only an Almighty arm can hold us up, and such a one is pledged to do it.

We have to wrestle. We must walk on slippery places, but the divine promises and power, the merits of the Redeemer's work and the virtue of his intercession are pledged to keep us.

The means of grace and the dealings of Providence are engaged to keep the saints and the Holy Spirit prevents them from wandering out of the way. Obscurity may gather over it. Other ways are plainer, easier, more pleasant and so we are tempted to leave it, but like Bunyans Christian on his journey, we are likely to land in doubting castle. Other ways seem to be more direct and shorter than the wearisom path we must pursue, but He keeps us from stumbling in the way. It must needs be that offences (or occasions of stumbling) come. Some of these occasions are the difficulties we meet in divine revelation. Things hard to be understood. Others are the mysteries of providence which have led some to say "as for me my feet were almost gone, my step had well nigh slipped."

The direct solicitations to evil cause us to stumble sometimes. While the afflictions and persecutions that arise for the word, causes offence. But great peace have they who love thy law and nothing shall cause them to stumble."

How marvelously He guided His people Israel! That was typical of the way He guides his people now. He will yet be as a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, else travelers would despair. Amidst the dangers that beset us. He protects, as well as preserves us from our enemies, especially from sin.

It is a narrow way with here and there a traveler, but "Broad is the way that leads to death, and thousands walk together there." Earth's crowds walk in other ways than wisdoms.

Tribulations make it a sad way, yet it is a joyous way, because by it we enter the Kingdom. It is a way of peace, for great peace have all things who love thy law and nothing shall offend them. Luke tells us that Jesus would "give light to them that sit in darkness and guide our feet in the way of peace."

Our eyes should be "toward the Lord for He shall pluck my feet out of the net." Then He makes us secure. What is so firm as the great rocks? He not only brings us up out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay, but He sets our feet upon a rock and establishes our goings. He even brings the saint into His gates. He keeps the saints from failing to reach the end of the way. Some start with bright hopes which are not realized by after experiences. Storms gather, enemies threaten, conflict must be waged; they become weary and dispondent and ready to halt, "But the righteous shall hold on his way." This is the testimony of Job, and he could speak out of the fullness of his experience. However, we must trust Him. This is imperative, We shall here rest for the present.

BROKEN DOWN IN HEALTH

Woman Tells How $5 Worth of Pinkham's Compound Made Her Well.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them."—Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 342 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache, or bearing-down pains, need the tonic properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Help to Save Nation's Food Supply

In this time of high cost of living, everybody should use all possible means to prevent waste and to help save food. No one means can be more effective than a vigorous campaign to exterminate rats which destroy over two hundred million dollars worth of foodstuffs annually. Keep garbage in rat-proof cans, stop up their holes, and above all exterminate them with Stearns' Paste, which can be bought for a few cents at any store. A two ounce box will usually rid a house or barn of every rat. It destroys mice, cockroaches and waterbugs as well. Adv.

HERMIT SCULPTOR IS FOUND

Spends Time Modeling Little Masterpieces Which He Promptly Destroys Upon Completion.

There has been discovered at Cape Scott, one of the most solitary points in Vancouver island, by the chief engineer of the public works department of British Columbia, a sculptor who spends his time in modeling little masterpieces from lumps of clay and then destroying them, relates an exchange.

He is A. F. Whittier, and he calls himself a "prospector." Living entirely alone, he has for the past two years been carrying out lonely investigations of mineral claims in his neighborhood. His sculptor's tools are of the simplest kind, and it is his habit to work with the same piece of clay, which weighs scarcely five pounds, but with that he has modeled scores of objects.

The government engineer found him just as he had completed a bust of the martyred British nurse, Edith Cavell. Mr. Whittier was about to destroy the work in order that he might use the clay for a miniature statue of his son who was recently killed. He was, however, persuaded to part with the bust, which is to be auctioned in aid of the Red Cross funds.

Back Lame and Achy?

There's little peace when your kidneys are weak and while at first there may be nothing more serious than dull backache, sharp, stabbing pains, headaches, dizzy spells and kidney irregularities, you must act quickly to avoid the more serious trouble, dropsy, gravel, heart disease, Bright's disease. Use Doan's Kidney Pills, the remedy that is so warmly recommended everywhere by grateful users.

A Virginia Case

C. L. Cook, 302 Oak St., Covington, Va., says: "A bad case of diphtheria left my kidneys very weak. The first symptom was backache that kept growing worse and then the kidney secretions began to pass too frequently and were painful. My limbs swelled nearly twice their normal size and though doctors treated me, I kept getting worse until I gave up hope of recovery. Finally, I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. During the past seven years, I have had no further trouble."

ADAM SPRUNG FIRST JOKE

Asked Eve If She Expected an Ichthyosaurus, When She Objected to Spider on Rose.

We believe that in the Garden of Eden, Adam gave Eve a rose in exchange for a kiss. And she shuddered and said, "Ugh! There's a spider on the rose!" And he answered, "Well, what do you expect for one stingy little kiss—an ichthyosaurus?"

We believe that to be the oldest joke in the world—older than the goat, the mother-in-law, or any that are supposed to be included in the Original Seven. In varying forms one finds it in the Talmud, in Plautus, in Aesop, in Rabelais, in Joe Miller, in all the almanacs and comic papers.

When we were a boy, it was told in a minstrel show, thus: A man buys a suit of clothes at a second-hand store. He comes back and complains that the coat is inhabited by unpleasant insects. And the dealer says, "Well, what do you expect for $5—humming birds?"

Vaudeville knows it in this form: Tenant—"Look here, you'll have to make some repairs in this house. The cellar is full of water! Landlord—"Well, what do you expect for $15 a month—champagne?"

And just last week we ran across our old friend again in a weekly comic paper. This time a passenger on a street car calls down the conductor for not calling the names of the streets distinctly. And the conductor replies, "Well, what do you expect for $14 a week—a tenor solo?"

Lastly—a few days ago, we ran a version of the old thing in this column. We cut its hair, trimmed its whiskers, and fitted it with a new suit, but we could not disguise it completely. When you run across it in any of its costumes, send us a clipping, will you? We are making a collection of that joke.

Prospects Excellent.

A friend dropped in to say hello the other day—he had been in the Blue Ridge region for a few weeks. He brought this story:

A young native, a widower of a year, called at the shack of the father of a numerous family, and after beating about the bush for a while, asked the parent for his daughter's hand.

"So ye want to get hitched with Sal?" said the old man. "I dunno about it. Yer fust wife didn't last ye long. What are yer prospecks?"

"Fine!" asserted the suitor. "All the wimmen what sent their washin' to my fust wife has promised to do the same by her successor, whoever she mout be. Oh, we'll git erlong all right!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Spirit That's Needed.

IT MUST be a source of great gratification to the pig to know that his future state is to be 60 cent bacon.

UNCLE SAM has advanced almost three billion dollars to the allies. As an advance man the U. S. is very much there.

"RUSSIA Scorns Separate Peace."—Headline. All the Allies ask is that Russia do less scorning and more fighting.

WE LONG for the good old days again, when the grocer waived identification and honored our order for a dollar's worth of sugar.

KEEP a sheep, keep a pig, keep a sow, keep a hen—or if unable to care for live stock keep your courage up and thus keep prices down.

PROF. JOLY estimates the age of the earth as 99,000,000 years. But why be meticulous? Let's call it a round 100,000,000 years. Do you mind?

WE gather from a series of test interviews that everybody expects Thanksgiving turkey to be cheap, because everybody else is going to have chicken.

"I NEVER could endure the humiliation of asking a man for money," writes a bachelor girl. Any candid housewife can tell this unsophisticated person how to get around that little difficulty.

GERMANY knows well how to strike at the points where corruption has weakened the fighting line of its enemies. Russia has learned this and now Italy. We should profit by the experience of others and not place any doubtful units on the firing line.

MUST WE BE CONTROLLED?

We are naturally an extravagant people. So long as we can see, even though it be in the future, the means to pay we keep our expenditures on the highest level of our desires.

That has not been altogether an evil in normal times. It has driven the American provider to the limit to keep pace with his expenditures and those of is family, but it has made him inventive, it has made him daring, it has made him utilize every ounce of energy and every grain of ingenuity. It has made for swift enterprise, for daring—and it has undoubtedly accomplished results which could not have been achieved had we been more conservative.

But we are now at war and conditions are entirely changed. We have got to learn—even at the cost of blood and tears—that extravagance at such a time cannot be permitted. It is not a question of providing the money. It is a question of whether we can afford it. It is entirely a question of conserving the supplies. Though you possess the money to pay for all the food in your local market you have no right to consume nor even to buy one ounce more than you actually need. Though the soaring cost of gasoline means nothing to your pocket it is criminal for you to use a gallon more than your reasonable necessities require. The fortune of a Rockefeller does not justify self indulgence now. Money is of value only as it can help win the war. Otherwise, for our present purposes, it means nothing more than the means for securing a livelihood. At least, that is what it should mean.

The great fundamental fact is that the supplies required to keep the world going—at least that part of the world in which we are interested—do not measure up to the demand, or even to the absolute requirements. We are short of food to feed our armies, our allies and ourselves, not to mention the neutrals. We are short millions of gallons of gasoline, and gasoline is one of the essentials for the successful conduct of our war. Every joy-ride, every unnecessary trip takes from the common stock and thereby has its influence on the prolonging of war. Though you can pay $5 a gallon you have no right to consume even a pint beyond your requirements. Your money does not increase the supply.

So it goes along the whole line. Money has lost its comparative value for the time being. It is the size of the stock that we have an hand or can obtain which is the important factor. The rich man has no right to draw upon this stock because he has the money to pay for it.

To be luxurious now is not only a crime but will swiftly meet with its own punishment. Unless it is immediately stopped the millionair as well as the beggar will be put upon a strict allowance. Our Allies as well as Germany have reached that point. No gasoline at all can be secured for new cars in England. The allowance for old cars is strictly limited.

Do the automobilists of America want to be put upon an allowance? If not let them cut down their wastefulness at once. The motor car as a business convenience and for reasonable family use may be tolerated for a long time. As ministering to our pleasure it will have to be strictly limited. Applying reasonableness now will prevent harsh control later. When it comes to the test the needs of our aeroplanes, ambulances and war motor cars will be met first.

What applies to gasoline applies to meat, to flour, to sugar and a hundred other necessities. The American must overcome his normal habits. He must learn to be a Spartan and a miser. If he doesn't, the lesson may be taught him in the least palatable form—by government interference.—By Charles J. Rosebault of The Vigilantes.

THE PENDULUM.

Cheer up. It's coming. When the tide runs low with disappointment and the realization of worst fears, the chances are that it is near the turning. It is so in the life of the individual; it is so throughout the whole world.

The war news has verified it. Not the accounts of battles, but the temper, the tone, the spirits of the people, have risen and fallen as if lifted or depressed together by some gigantic seismic oscillation. Sometimes these elations and depressions are directly accounted for by happenings at the front; oftener they surge and ebb in obedience to their own inner impulse.

War was declared. Nation after nation became involved. The established order seemed about to be engulfed. Panic reigned. The end of the world was freely predicted. But no, the reaction came, and without apparent cause. The war would soon be over. Great civilized people would find a way out. There would be a military demonstration and then an appeal to The Hague. They would all be back home when the leaves dropped.

But the Germans fell with crashing force on Belgium. All the pent-up energies of years of preparation were let loose. Belgium wavered and crumpled up. Big Berthas and poisonous gas were innovations. The world had never heard of such warfare. France fell back before it.

But England was coming. England was great and powerful. Surely England would stem the tide. No England, too was powerless. England had but few troops and no equipment comparable to that of the Germans. The Germans would overrun western Europe. They would make the Atlantic a Teutonic pond.

Then came the Marne. Then Verdun. Germany was talking peace. It would be all over before another winter. We'll have the boys out of the trenches before Christmas. And then the deadlock. It might last forever. Russia began a campaign. Maybe the Russian hordes would end it. But how the Russians could run! Their guns were but sticks in their hands. Their war office had proved false to them. Munitions were lacking. No use to count on Russia. But Italy had the blood of the Romans. Italy would smash Austria, already discouraged. There would be an early peace. The west front was holding. The decesion was at hand. Then Mackensen. Good night, Italy. And there we are.

The fluctuations of the fortunes of war are but ripples compared with the tides that rise and fall in the great common, human heart. For all life is one. The breast of man rises and falls; his heart throbs in ceaseless rhythm, and with like periodicity his courage rises and falls as if drawn by the varying attractions of hope and despair.

Some day we shall know more of this. The primal causes now are hidden. This much is significant. Man has his tiny being in the midst of immensities. He is but the dust mote caught from the air and tossed for the time upon the infinite billows of ocean. The whole limitless universe beats and throbs with measurless power. A million suns tug at each other across the imensities. Our own petty solar system is athrob with power that swells and ebbs from its heart, the orb of day. Our earth speck whirls about its sun, in the grip of forces that rend its surface with tornadoes, lift its oceans in the ceaseless throb of tides, bring in the endless variation of the seasons, and the interchange of light and darkness. And on this earth-speck are men, fighting their little battles, tossed to and fro on the billows of their emotions and imagining fondly that their affairs cut great figure. Out of it all at least may be gained one consolation. When we are in the depths, we are due for a rise to another wave crest.

Electricians for Navy.

Young men with an elementary knowledge of electricity are offered exceptional opportunities for good positions in the United States Navy through a recent request from the Bureau of Navigation for a limited number of recruits in the rating of electricians (general.)

These recruits are sent to the electrical schools maintained by the Navy Department and after completing a thorough course of instruction are placed on board the ships of the Navy. There is no limit in the promotions to which they may rise by strict application to their duties.

The general requirements are that applicants must know the names and uses of the various parts of the dynamo and dynamo engine, must be familiar with the ordinary types of switchboards and methods of wiring, must understand elementary Arithmetic, and must be between the ages of 18 and 25 years.

There is also an urgent need for more young men in all the branches of the naval service, and Maryland with its fine record for recruits in the past, is looked to by the Bureau of Navigation to continue to give its share.

Upon going to the main station at Baltimore applicants should take with them proper proof of their age.

A Night in the Mountains.

The "Pause in the Day's Occupation" had come to the weary, happy mountaineers. Sitting in front of the little log, lean-to with the fire crackling lazily, soothingly, their conversation had died away, and each one was occupied with his own thoughts and musings.

The moon lit up the small scrub pines and rocks near the shack. Below in the valley the lights of a gay summer resort twinkled and a lake shown white among the dark pines. The mountains beyond rose to a sea of light.—Misty peaks, stretching out endlessly, mysteriously.

Above was the most impressive sky we had ever seen. All the stars had come out it seemed, and the longer we looked the more stars we saw. But, when we consider the countless worlds they represented, the problem grew too big and we turned our eyes back to the fire. Now dying, now flaring up it fell upon the old and dear comrades, revealing something of a new peace, contentment and calm in their faces.

From the valley below, a faint note was boren up with the rushing winds. It was the whistle of an express train, which went tearing thru the night, leaving a stream of glowing sparks behind it. A faint smile went round the crowd. A log in the fire slipped. Someone rose to replace it—the spell was broken. Everyone began to talk; good nights were said, final plans for the morrow arranged and we all stretched out on the pine boughs and drew our blankets around us. A few whispers,—a little squirming and twisting—then silence, except for the fire and wind. The spirit of the mountains again held sway.

A STAR FOR EVERY STATE

Each Has Its Particular Place On the American Flag.

Did you know that every star in our American flag has its own individual and particular state which it represents and that its placement on the square of blue is carefully and definitely regulated by law and executive order?

In 1912, on October 26, the last executive order concerning the flag was made and it provided for the specific arrangement of the stars. They were to be arranged in six horizontal rows of eight stars each. Starting in the upper lefthand corner and placing each row from left to right, the star corresponding to each state is named in the order of the state's ratification of the Constitution.

Thus Star No. 1, in the upper left hand corner, is for Delaware. Star No. 48, in the lower righthand corner, is for Arizona.

The following list will show you at a glance exactly which star is yours:

First Row—No. 1, Delaware; 2, Pennsylvania; 3, New Jersey; 4, Georgia; 5, Connecticut; 6, Massachusetts; 7, Maryland; 8, South Carolina.

Second Row—No. 9, New Hampshire; 10, Virginia; 11, New York; 12, North Carolina; 13, Rhode Island; 14, Vermont; 15, Kentucky; 16, Tennessee.

Third Row—No 17, Ohio; 18, Louisiana; 19, Indiana; 20, Mississippi; 21, Illinois; 22, Alabama; 23, Maine; 24, Missouri.

Fifth Row—No. 33, Oregon; 34, Kansas; 35, West Virginia; 36, Nevada; 37, Nebraska; 38, Colorado; 39, South Dakota; 40, North Dakota.

Sixth Row—No. 41, Montana; 42, Washington; 43, Idaho; 44, Wyoming; 45, Utah; 46, Oklahoma; 47, New Mexico; 48, Arizona.

A Wonderful Furnace!

Heats Through One Register

The Caloric Pipeless Furnace is a revelation in simple, efficient and economical home heating. It has no pipes and but one register. It sends warm air by natural circulation through the whole house, drawing down at the same time the return air through a properly constructed channel to be heated again and restored to the circulation. There is absolutely no heat waste in this method. Just as a living spring constantly pours up fresh cool water so the is constantly pouring up revitalized warm air. It's as natural as nature itself and very economical of fuel. The Caloric is positively guaranteed to reduce your fuel bill by a third at least, and the double ribbed firepot (500 square inches more radiating surface than other firepots) for five years' solid service.

Why waste heat in long, cold pipes and wall flues? Why not send it directly up where you live and need it? That's common sense and economy. Hundreds of satisfied users say the Caloric is a heating wonder, and you will agree if you install it. Let us show it to you.

BANNER SCHOOL

Highest Attendance for September Gives These Schools the Leadership.

Based upon percentage basis, secured by dividing the average attendance by the enrollment, the following are the banner schools in attendance for the month of September, as announced by the county superintendent of schools, each of these being the highest in the particular election district given; state high schools being excluded.

District No. 1.—Walnut Bottom, Mary Eggers, 82 per cent.

No. 2—Trap Run, Arch C. Friend, 98 per cent.

No. 3—Engle, Ida V. Engle, 97 per cent.

No. 4—Firm Rock, Margaret Athey, 84 4 per cent.

No. 5—Mineral Spring, Bertha Spaerlein, 100 per cent.

No. 6—Sebold, S. K. Welch, 79 per cent.

No. 7—Bernard, T. C. Bittinger, 94 per cent.

No. 8—Oak Grove, Carrie Mann, 92 per cent.

No. 9—Finzel, Jessie Riggleman, 88 per cent.

No. 10—Wilson, Margaret Reilly, 86 per cent.

No. 11—Warnick, Agnes Bradley, 95.4 per cent.

No. 12—Bowser, Vespie Fike, 87.5 per cent.

No. 13—Short Run, Catherine Shillingburg, 98 per cent.

No. 14—Oakland Grammar, Hermann A. Ziel, 93 per cent.

One striking observation made from the above is that the smallest school in the county, Mineral Spring, led in its district, No. 5, whereas the largest school in the county, the Oakland Grammar in election district No. 14 led in its district. This shows that all schools, irrespective of enrollment, have an opportunity to lead in percentage of attendance. These schools and teachers are to be particularly commended, for good attendance means more money for schools from the State Treasury.

TO OUR PATRONS.

In view of the approach of the winter season, we feel it our duty to call the attention of natural gas consumers to the conditions with which we are confronted, and accompanying cold weathr.

Each winter we have experienced an increased demand for natural gas. The colder the weather the more excessive it is, and the coming winter, due to the high price of coal, we anticipate it will be greater than ever. After continuously exhausting our gas fields for many years past, we are compelled to operate with reduced pressures and a decreased supply, both of which are temporarily affected by extreme or continued low temperatures. Such a combination of conditions is beyond our power to control and it is possible for brief periods our service may be inadequate and should not be relied upon without some risk of personal discomfort. We therefore, at this time desire to give due notice of such possibilities, and recommend and urge all the consumers, and especially those using gas in furnaces, to provide themselves with some other fuel and be fully prepared in case of any shortage, and in order to avoid discomfort and suffering, not to depend upon gas as the sole means of heating their homes, but to supply themselves with a reasonable amount of coal or other fuel as a precautionary measure.

We have during the past year been conducting a continuous drilling campaign to add to our supply and will continue our efforts to meet the requirements of the winter demands, but we consider it essential and proper to give this timely demands, but we consider it essential and proper to give this timely warning and to suggest that homes be provided with supplementary or auxiliary appliances available for the use of other fuels.

The Protector of Finance

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

THE DUPLICATE SECRET AGENT

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

WHEN his office stenographer announced that Resilius Marvel, invincible head of the famous United Bankers' Protective association, had gone to Rio Janeiro, Brazil, on a secret and important mission, I smiled to myself. It was true that for several days the secretary of the association had attended to the duties of the office. It was also true that Marvel's bachelor quarters uptown were closed and the shades drawn. He was no longer present at his accustomed haunts. I, his favored friend, had not seen him since the Tuesday previous. For all that, I doubted if this secret agent and protector of the city's banks was one and identical with the Resilius Marvel whose minor office force supposed him to be a thousand miles distant.

The more I revived the last occasion upon which I had seen him, the more certain was I that my informant was mistaken, and some one else "double-crossed." I applied this phrase at the time with casual glibness. I little dreamed how pat was my surmise until events progressed. Upon the evening referred to I had strolled over to Marvel's room for a quiet smoke and chat, to find him packing a grip.

"Rush call," he announced briskly. "It's a brief journey, a consultation and a small fortune, this time."

I expressed my regret at losing his company. I repressed my intense curiosity. He never wasted words to no purpose, never made untimely disclosures. When he got ready, or the minute was right, or time developed the circumstances, I would be duly appraised, I knew.

"Sit down," he directed, leading me into a little den off the main apartment. "I have something to tell you," and he pointed to a sheet of tissue paper spread across a stand.

I noted a nondescript assemblage of some matches, what suggested shoe scrapings, a little heap of hard black cinders, a jagged piece of paraffine paper and a pile of crisp brittle ashes.

"In the first place," narrated Marvel, "a letter was slipped through the door slot into my metal mail box yesterday evening, and I am unable to determine its contents. In plain words, a missive intended for me was destroyed. Some one knew it was coming to me, or had arrived, and slid lighted matches through the slot until the letter was burned up."

"Just after noon today," resumed Marvel, "I had a visitor. He presented a card which announced him to be Senor Marco Valdez, a business man of Rio Janeiro, Brazil. He did not prepossess me favorably from the start. In fact, he had not been with me more than two minutes before I traced an ulterior design in his mission and straightway lent myself to his leading. He had baited his trap with five thousand dollars, and to his way of thinking I fell into it body and heels. There was family trouble at Rio, serious trouble with the various branches of the Valdez family, rich as it was, powerful as it always had been. Bankers, cattlemen, exporters, their family interests were in peril from a circumstance of which I would be apprised when I reached Rio—with sealed instructions, mind you; for, although he had traveled far to engage me at the suggestion of the president of a New York bank, he must leave an explanation as to how and why my services were required to his brother, Colonel Valdez, of Rio Janeiro. My visitor produced five one-thousand-dollar bank notes, and requested me to designate a bank where he should deposit them, subject to my order upon my return from my mission. He further tendered a memoranda of a contract to be O. K.'d by his brother. Two million dollars was involved in the case. Should I succeed in accomplishing what his brother would direct, I was to receive ten per cent. of this enormous sum."

"Quite a speculation," I suggested.

"So rich and promising," observed Marvel in his dry, wise way, "that I accepted at once. The details were gone over. I am expected to leave on the evening fast mail. The office can run itself on routine work until I return. If you feel lonesome, drop over here once in a while," and he handed me a duplicate key to the apartments.

"And you may return more speedily than you now plan," I suggested.

"Possibly. After all was said and done," continued my friend, "my visitor proceeded on his trip—to Denver, I think he said. Then I sat down to cogitate over some flaws in his story. One—he said he had been at his hotel all the morning. See exhibits 1 and 2, meaning that little heap of cinders, and next to it that pile of shoe scrapings. I took pains to place brim up on a newspaper the hat my visitor wore, shaking these cinders off the rim. They came from a locomotive, I reckon, thereby indicating that my client lied to me, and that he had been sitting at the open window of a railway car just before he reached here. As to the shoe scrapings, they are the result of contact of the sole of his shoe with the round of the chair over yonder where he rested it. There is a good deal of marble dust mixed with the clay, which is reddish. I recall that the yard at the state prison, forty miles from here, has a marble yard and a natural red clay soil."

"I see," I nodded, energetically and admiringly.

"Flaw two—I offered Senor Marco Valdez a cigar after we had talked awhile," resumed Marvel, "but I did not offer him a light. He took out his own match box. Exhibit three, those match stubs yonder represent the discarded burned lucifers. Next to them the dozen or more ends are those I found in my letter box. They bear resemblance, eh?"

"Manifestly," I acceded, after an inspection. "You mean that your visitor must have been the person who burned up the letter in your mail box?"

"Precisely. While I was conversing with him a door was closed noisily in another apartment. I feigned fear of an intrusion. 'Step in there for a moment,' I directed my visitor, opening the door to that anteroom yonder. Instantly, taken off his guard, he seized the reverse knob and held to it as I pushed the door shut. Then I had my man down in black and white. Unconsciously he had followed the prison rule of drawing to and holding tightly the door until the tier locking bar falls in place. When I announced a false alarm and called him back into the room, I had ready, spread over the blotter on my desk, a paraffined sheet of paper. 'Just set your thumb on that corner while I tack it down,' I suggested. He did so, and that piece of it you see has the impress of his thumb. I made ado to do some scribbling on the sheet to subdue any suspicions he might entertain. He went away satisfied that by night I would be on my way on a fool's errand."

"And later?"

"The identification bureau. Thanks to his thumb impression and my ability to describe my plausible visitor, I was practically convinced that I had been honored by a call from no less a personage than the notorious Rex Maginn, alias the 'Human Spool.'"

"A strange pseudonym," I observed.

"So awarded," explained Marvel, "on account of his brilliant record as an expert smuggler up along the Canadian border. This man was once captured by the Detroit police. They disrobed him to find some thousands of yards of fine lace wound round and round him. They began turning him in a circle. They reeled off vast quantities of the stuff, until he fell down dizzy and exhausted, and they had to give him frequent rests before they unwound the discomfited human spool."

"A known criminal, then?"

"Yes, but quiescent for a few years, the record runs. That is his system, however. He generally satisfies himself with pulling off two or three big things in a decade."

"And is probably preparing for one of those signal events at the present time," I ventured.

"Beyond doubt. In plain English, this man and his associates are bent upon some big scheme, probably in the bank line, where my absence is an essential. I wired the state prison. Our Brazilian friend was there this morning, and visited a long termer named Dorchester Ickes, who is serving time as a bank embezzler."

"If I can assist you—" I suggested, hoping that Marvel would let me.

"I will cable you," was the response, with a dry, dry smile—"from Rio."

It was a case of "while the cat's supposed to be away the mice will play," to my manner of thinking. I looked for something to happen immediately. Three days passed by, however, and Resilius Marvel, according to the schedule, should be forty-eight hours out on the Brazilian steamer Express, bound for Rio. While I was sure that some big bank trick was about to be pulled off, as the saying goes, I wondered where the lightning might strike, how and when, and doubted not that Rex Maginn would be in evidence when the culmination arrived. The Human Spool did not put in an appearance, however. I wondered if Marvel had already nipped his scheme in the bud.

The third evening, I found myself headed in the direction of Marvel's apartment and I quickened my steps as I turned a corner to come within view of the house where Marvel lived. At the side of one of the shades of his library there was a glint of light. The shade had become disarranged in some way. I drew back, walked forward, stooped, and then got upon a hitching block to acquire the exact focus I needed.

At last—there was Resilius Marvel, in his accustomed easy chair. Standing near a table in front of him was a stout man wearing a full white beard and a silk hat. He was drawing on his gloves as if about to depart. I walked around the corner, posted myself in an open doorway adjoining the apartment house, and waited.

Almost immediately I saw the man with the high hat come out into the street. He turned in first one direction and then another and glanced sharply down the street in both. Then he almost ran to an automobile standing at the curb, leaped into it, slammed its door shut, gave some quick order to the chauffeur and the machine started away.

I had no reason to imagine anything significant and sinister about the man except his covert, nervous actions. I had no thought of following him. My intention was to mount the stairs to Marvel's rooms and venture to intrude upon my friend. At just that juncture, however, something happened, something so unexpected that I was lifted off my feet, fairly.

Standing in the shadow of a line of trees opposite the apartment house was a second machine. Its chauffeur was unobtrusively lounging in his seat. As if by magic he started up. A man made a flying leap from some dark doorway back from the curb. I knew the sprint, I knew the supple swing of the body, I caught the outline of the face in a glint of the corner arc light, though well shadowed by a broad peaked cap pulled down almost to the raised collar of the cravenette—it was Resilius Marvel.

The first automobile was out of sight, the second machine two blocks down the street by the time I could comprehend what two Resilius Marvels meant and what that discovery might mean for me.

There was a plan, then, not only to send Resilius Marvel away from the city so as to leave the field clear for the operations of the Human Spool and his accomplices, but as well his deserted quarters were to be appropriated by the people who sought to dupe him. Further than this, a counterfeit Resilius Marvel had been constructed. I had seen him. I saw him again as I swiftly ran around the corner and sought my old focal point. Yes, there was the duplicate of my professional friend. He was standing up now. I watched him put on a pair of hideous eye-obscuring goggles and a false mustache. Under this new mask he no longer resembled the man he had counterfeited. However, the made-up face that was Marvel at a distance was ready for disclosure when necessary.

A score of theories presented themselves readily to my mind. Of course the man with the tall hat was a figure of some importance in the case. It was this person whom Marvel had chosen to follow. Of course my friend was aware of the imposture going on. Since he had left the home end of the affair to take care of itself he must have provided for later picking up this strand of the proposition and following it up. For all that, as the lights went out in that upper apartment some of the sleuth fever Marvel had imbued me with came into my veins.

"NONSENSE!" HE SAID, SIMPLY BUT FORCIBLY

Marvel Two came down to the street, drew his coat well up about his neck and shoulders and walked along, unconcerned and apparently disdaining all thoughts of being followed. I acted the shadow the best I knew how. In an expert case I would probably have failed. In the present instance I seemed to succeed. My man—let me call him the "Duplicate"—went straight to a railroad depot. At its ticket office he purchased transportation, and then at some urgent words from the ticket agent hurried down the stairs to the train sheds.

I think I did a clever thing just there. I hastened to the ticket windows and opened my pocket book.

"Same as my friend," I said. "Train ready?"

"You'll hustle if you make it," was the reply. The speaker threw me out a ticket and my change rapidly. I was not in shape just then to keep steadily on the trail of the man I had shadowed thus far, nor had that been my intention. I saw a train pulling out just as I reached the train sheds. I doubted not that my man was aboard. Then I glanced at the bit of pasteboard in my hand.

It read: "Springfield." That was a town about two hundred miles distant. I prided myself on having discovered at least the temporary location of the Duplicate. Then I returned to the home quarters of Resilius Marvel.

Somehow I felt safe in using the key my friend had supplied me, to take up watch and ward in those rooms of his. I reasoned that the only other outsider likely to intrude there would be the Duplicate. Had I not seen him leave the city? Very probably he had served his purpose in posing as Resilius Marvel. For himself that section of his plot was consummated fully. The scene would now shift. Perhaps Marvel conjectured this same thing and would return. I sat down in an easy chair to wait for him. He did not come. I fell asleep. When I woke up the light of a new day was invading the room.

As I left the apartment house, got breakfast and went down to the bank, I felt that I must not remain inert. More than once I took out the bit of pasteboard that had cost me something over four dollars, and that name, "Springfield," seemed to lure me on. I left a brief note for the president of the bank, whose confidential secretary I was. I merely named Resilius Marvel. I knew that would suffice and atone.

The first train for Springfield, I found upon inquiry at the railroad station, left in an hour. I was one of its passengers. I had no idea what purpose I might serve by thus mixing up with an intricate case solely within the province of Marvel to explore and exploit. However, I could casually look out for the Duplicate. The presence of the latter at Springfield might be known to my friend. Perhaps I would run across Resilius Marvel himself.

I did not gain any results from a stroll about the streets. Then as a bank man I became interested in looking over the two institutions the place supported. There was the Farmers & Drovers', a small concern, and the City National, the leading financial institution of the district. I looked in at both banks. The cursory visit gave me no new inspiration or impetus, so I planned to return home on the next train. I found none city bound until late in the evening, however, and therefore decided to view the palatial home of Daniel Morgan, president of the City National bank. I strolled toward it casually to put in the time.

The residence of the financier was certainly worth viewing. I could not help but admire the ornate residence, the beautiful garden surroundings. Slowly retracing my way townwards again I slowed up as I saw two men come out through the iron-guarded gateway.

The one I recognized first was the Duplicate. Except in his walk and the build of his frame he was Resilius Marvel—at a distance. His face was well made up. A person who had only seen the Marvel portrait would be deceived. There were certain characteristics missing for a man who had been intimate with the real Marvel, but this imposter might have walked through nine out of ten city banks and would have been accepted as the genuine article.

And then I fell to studying the Duplicate's companion. The latter wore no long beard, his attire was different from that of the man I had seen at Marvel's apartments the evening previous, but he certainly was the man who had jumped into the automobile with Resilius Marvel in pursuit.

If the Duplicate was Rex Maginn, the Human Spool, and his present companion the white-whiskered man and the president of the City National bank of Springfield, then indeed I had come upon the scene at an interesting juncture, to say the least.

The two men proceeded on a moderate walk until they had reached the City National bank. Then they entered it, the man I might suppose to be Morgan in the lead. They entered it, but not by the front, where the night watchman was seated on the stone steps. The banker unlocked a door on the side street. They disappeared from view.

It was fully half an hour before the side door again opened and Morgan came out alone. He went around to the front, spoke to the watchman and then proceeded homewards at a leisurely gait. I did not follow him. Had I not the sure evidence that a false Resilius Marvel was now alone in that treasure house of riches, left to roam at will, with the watchman very probably instructed not to disturb him nor interfere with his actions?

Of a surety the Duplicate was a criminal. He could, therefore, only have gained the confidence of the bank president with some evil purpose in view. It was up to me to act. The local police were at once in my thoughts. I turned, cogitating upon the course I would pursue, when a hand was placed abruptly upon my shoulder.

Out of the gloom of a doorway behind me stepped Marvel. He was disguised in part, but I knew him in a flash. If I doubted—so many strange events were transpiring—I was reassured as he spoke.

"Capable man," were his applauding words. "Tell me about it."

I briefly detailed the course of events that had brought me up to the present point in my rather blind progress.

"Never that, though," commented my friend rather sharply, as I spoke of calling in local police aid. "Remember, my province is rather to suppress than punish. The man so confidingly placed in the bank yonder is Rex Maginn."

"The Human Spool?"

"There is only one. He has done well. I nearly missed the trail, and it was a veritable needle in a haystack for a while. The president of the bank here and the man with the white beard are one and the same. Why he thought best to visit the city under an assumed guise I have not yet fathomed, but I judge it was that he wished no inkling of his absence or mission to reach friends. He entered his city hotel, gray hair and all. He left it secretly by a side entrance denuded of all disguise. He was gone and I was at sea. Then I went straight to the state prison. The first thing I found out was that he had really visited a prisoner there. It was Ickes. The next thing I discovered was that Ickes was serving a term for embezzling from this same City National Bank of Springfield. I learned more there, and I came on here to watch, wait and have an interview with this Daniel Morgan. We will finish that end of the proposition now."

The bank president looked up from his writing as Marvel and myself were ushered into the library of his residence. He started slightly as Marvel placed his hand over his face and those strong features of his underwent a subtle change. Then as my friend placed one of his cards before the banker, a deep frown crossed his brow. For only an instant he seemed swiftly to reflect. He gave the bit of pasteboard a contemptuous toss into the waste basket at his side. He spoke one word, looking Marvel squarely in the face.

"Nonsense!" he said, simply, but forcibly.

"You doubt the authenticity of my credentials, I see," submitted Marvel.

"Let me warn you, I will suffer no travesty or scheme to intrude upon me!" warned Morgan in a strident tone.

Resilius Marvel leisurely turned away. His swift eyes swept over the well-filled book shelves. He coolly walked to the nearest case, swung open its door, took out an elegantly bound volume and brought it to the desk. The banker had no opportunity to resent or resist the action before my friend had opened the book, thumbed over a few pages and turned to the view of his unwilling host a full page portrait with accompanying biographical matter on the opposite page.

I knew the book at a glance. It was a volume devoted to "Who's Who" in banking. It contained the leading financiers of the country, and a facsimile of the signature of every cashier in the United States and Canada.

"You wish to have me believe that is your picture," observed the banker in a sneering tone. "Allowing for some resemblance—"

Resilius Marvel boldly seized a pen and a tab of paper. He placed it beside the steel plate one in the book.

"Compare, if you please," he said. "You are thinking of another Resilius Marvel whom you met. If you chance to have any specimen of his handwriting, submit it to the test."

"Hah!"—it was a strange sound that clicked in the throat of the bank president. His hand went to an inside pocket. He brought out an envelope and scanned its enclosure, some memoranda furnished by the Duplicate, or the like. He was on his feet, shaking with dismay as a light seemed to flash across his mind.

"What—what does this mean?" he asked, hoarsely.

"That a clever criminal has induced you to give him full swing inside of your institution," replied Marvel decisively. "The loose ends of the explanation you had best wait to explore after you have made sure that he has not already carried out his designs."

It was half an hour later that the banker let us into the bank, just as he had introduced the Duplicate. He led us rather nervously and hastily into his private office, then to a waiting room, thence across the counting room and before the great steel vault. He had told us on the way that he had unset the system of burglar alarms for the police at the suggestion of the supposed Marvel—possibly the most effective system in use in the state. The vault door was open and he rushed beyond it. Then we heard a clang as he fell against one of the inner doors.

"Gone!" he cried, "and—the strong box looted!"

One glance Marvel gave, then he was out into the counting room, down the steps and outside. I followed him.

"Quick, my man!" he shouted to the watchman. "Have you seen anybody leave the bank?"

"Two minutes before you came—the gentleman Mr. Morgan brought here. He had a satchel, the bank satchel, but I was ordered not to interfere with him."

"Which way?" demanded Marvel quickly.

"Down that alley."

Before I knew it Marvel had disappeared. I was no crack sprinter, and I lost sight of him before I had settled the point that I might have been of some use to him. Morgan came out of the bank almost tearing his hair. He had a weak spell from his excitement, and I had to ease him to a stone step while the watchman ran into the bank for some water.

We had about revived him when Marvel reappeared. He carried a yellow satchel in his hand. He had a companion, but as the latter came within the radius of the street lamp I saw that he was not the Duplicate, but a ragged, tramplish-looking fellow. He had a bleeding cut on one cheek, which he was nursing with a handkerchief Marvel apparently had given him.

"Take care of him till a little later," directed Marvel to the watchman. "See if your stuff is all right," he added to Morgan, throwing the satchel on the table as we entered the bank again.

He was at the telephone next, and I heard orders to the local police to watch trains, country roads and the slum quarters for the man described.

Morgan had pulled open the satchel. Like some madman he examined package after package of money, notes and other securities.

"Safe and sound!" he gloated. "What an escape! and—what does it all mean?" he cried, gazing blankly at Marvel.

"You have a manager here named Leslie Forbes?" quietly questioned Marvel.

"Why, yes," replied the banker, in surprise.

"And one of your employes named Ickes was sent to the penitentiary by you for embezzlement a year ago?"

"What is the connection?" challenged the banker.

"Simply this," explained Marvel, "that Forbes is the pivot upon which revolves this entire case. The man is a pervert, but a coward. He would not directly steal a penny, but this Ickes, his friend, has had time to figure out a very pretty and elaborate plot in prison. Briefly, for some months certain irregularities have occurred in the bank that troubled you. Never a suspicion came into your mind that Ickes, whom you implicitly trusted, was involved. Deftly, without your ever guessing it, he has made money and securities disappear, to reappear. He has even had the balances overrun, all to convey the idea to you that some one or more of your three subordinates were borrowing secretly from the bank to gamble or invest. Two of your employes were sons of wealthy clients, and you feared to make a rash move. In the meantime, with the aid of one Maginn, the man in prison was setting up his scheme. Deftly, to relieve your anxieties, Forbes suggested the confidential services of Resilius Marvel. The plotters planned to get me out of the way, and I accommodated them.

"The conspirators knew that the City National was practically impregnable from the outside. But Maginn had been given the combination to vault and strong box. My counterpart made you believe he would secrete himself in that cabinet yonder, whence he could watch all the movements of your employes tomorrow. You fell in with his ideas. I was barely in time to catch a glimpse of him as he sped away with his plunder. He saw that I was close upon him after a brisk run. He turned a curve in the alley. I heard a crash of glass. Rounding the turn I saw him crossing some shed roofs. Just then the man outside here staggered up the steps of a deserted building. He had been asleep on the floor when the satchel landed on him, and he was cut by the falling glass. I think that is all," concluded Marvel, drawing on his gloves in a leisurely manner.

"Except a substantial recognition of your services, by mail, Mr. Marvel. As to Forbes, and this Maginn—if he is caught—"

"That is for you to decide," said Marvel.

"By the way, our friend outside—he has been a friend indeed," said the banker, and he extended a one hundred dollar note to Marvel.

I accompanied my friend outside. The tramp, little dreaming that he had brought to light something like a million in cold cash, stood rubbing his injured face and grumbling at fate.

"I'd like to catch the man who slugged me with that satchel!" he growled, "and disturbed me out of the only bed I've known for a month."

Here was where my companion stepped in, pressing the one hundred dollar bill into the hand of the dumfounded wanderer.

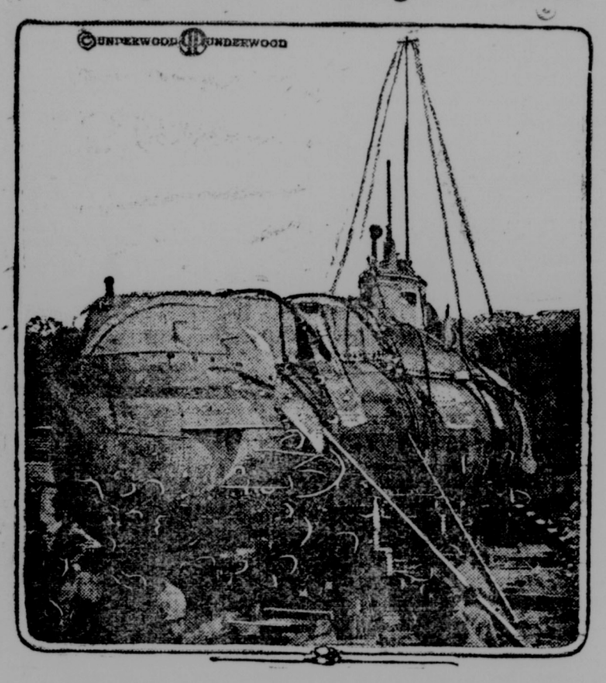
"Finish your nap at the best hotel in town, my friend," said Resilius Marvel.

Family Arguments.

Argument is one of the four bases of conversation. It is one of the best mental exercises. But in the bosom of the family, on unimportant matters, it is perhaps the most prolific breeder of ill-nature that the average family circle has to fear. Few persons can triumph in an argument without pride in the defeat of the opponent, who, in his humiliation, too often resorts to sarcasm to cover his defeat. Sarcasm, a weapon unworthy of gentlelady or a gentleman, creates hostility, begets ill-nature, and so the average family dispute begins.

One is inclined sometimes to wonder if argument, except on matters of definite importance, should not be barred from the family circle. Its restriction to a minimum would be good. Only those who can win without exultant triumph, only those who can lose with a smile and an admission of defeat should permit themselves to engage in it except when vital decisions are necessary. Peace, love, good fellowship are essential to a happy family.—Milwaukee Journal.

German Sub on Exhibition in New York Is Aptly Called "U-Bought-a-Bond"



A German U-Boat which was brought to this country to aid in the sale of Liberty Bonds and is now in Central Park, New York, has been appropriately renamed "U-Bought-a-Bond," and has become one of the most popular exhibitions of the metropolis. The boat was brought to this country in three sections, and set up to show Americans just what the destructive undersea craft of Germany look like. As a silent salesman for Liberty Bonds it proved a great boon to the campaign. The boat was formerly the UC-6, which was captured by the British. It is 110 feet long and weighs 70 tons. The boats now in use are from 200 to 300 feet long.

SAMMIES AS THE FRENCH SEE THEM

Glowing Terms In Which They Paint Americans.

Paris, October 15.—The American Sammy, from the French view, is a wonderful institution. The Franco-American viewpoint, however, paints him in even more glowing terms. Following is the latter viewpoint given for the first time for the United Press by Andre Glarner.

"Americans have put a new star in their flag." It was a Frenchman who said this to me in the region where certain thousands of warlike sons of Uncle Sam are now training for their part in the greatest war in history. Certainly this was my impression also.

Motoring from here to another of the group of American camps I almost felt that I was in one of the Western United States. American cavalrymen met us riding in the typical Western American saddle, with leather-covered stirrups. There were American motorcycles, with side cars, going back and forth on the roads. There were pack mules, such as the American Army used in campaigning against the rebellious redskin in the mountainous regions of the West. In the villages were more obvious signs. If cleanliness is next to godliness, then there should be almost godliness in these French villages since the Americans arrived there There is the unmistakable odor of disinfectants, barrels of which are seen in reserve.

The Americans are very popular with the natives. The young soldiers mix readily with the latter. They have a great desire to learn the language, and they set themselves about it with characteristic decision, energy and competence. They are good-natured, affable and ready to accept friendly approaches.

When I was at the Olympic games in Stockholm a few years ago, a thing that greatly impressed me was the single-mindedness of the American athletes. They were not seen in the streets nor in the pleasure resorts. They were there for a certain object and it was their one idea, to which they devoted all their time and efforts.

It is so with them now in France. If you speak to any of them on the road you will know at once what is in their minds. They have come over to finish the war. They say it and they mean it. Without exaggeration their enthusiasm may be described as terrible. They are in deadly earnest and behind that earnestness is an energy that is almost startling even to one who has an intimate knowlede of the American temperament. They do not say as the French do: "We will get them," when speaking of the Germans, but rather something like this: The German is a d—— good man and we'll have to train like h——l to get him." They are preparing themselves by a training of a streanuous kind. Their earnestness and energy are evident in all they do. The American General in command said to me:

"We have French instructors for certain things and British instructo s for certain things. We are taking something from each of them and that something we shall adapt to our own temperament, forming methods that, for our usage, will seem to us most effective.

The General's words were illustrated by what I actually saw. The American officers and men are eminently open minded. They are not like the British in this, who in most things are slow to accept any change. The Americans use the British helmet and the French gas-mask. They do not care whether a device comes from China or Uruguay. They are engaged in making an American war machine and it will be made in the end eminently American, because no detail of its formation and operation, no matter how small, will be neglected. Some of the details may prove on the great test to be of prime importance. When that machine is ready the Boches will certainly know that "something is coming."

It is necessary, however, that one impression should be guarded against. The American troops are not ready. They will not be for some time to come. It is important that they should not be sent against the enemy prematurely. These are the words of an authorized official spokesman of the American high command.

In watching drilling exercises in camp I got this impression: The French recruit goes through his motions because he has to. In bayonet practice he lunges forward just far enough to touch the dummy. His action appears perfunctory. The American, on the other hand, enters into its whole meaning. He does with his might whatever he undertakes. He puts his whole weight into the thrust and his bayonet pierces the dummy through and through. It is the same in all exercises. I saw a group of officers training for five consecutive hours, It was the hardest, most heart-breaking athletic work I have ever witnessed. It comprised physical exertion of almost every sort. These officers are drilled by a British sergeant and, by the way, he has under his orders a son of a former president of the United States of America. It was a treat to watch the sergeant at his task. "Now boys," he would cry, "the only good Boche is a dead one, That's the way! Give it to 'im sweet—the sweet death—that's what he wants. Now, nice and cool. Now he'e dead."

GRANTSVILLE.

Mrs. Harry Leatham had the misfortune to fall and break her right arm at the wrist on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 20. Mrs. Leatham, in company with several other ladies, was walking down the pike at the east end of town, when she slipped and fell, bending her wrist under her as she fell. She hurried in search of medical aid, but both doctors being absent, Dr. Hemminger from Meyersdale, who was in Grantsville at the time, set the broken bone, which is healing nicely.

The first snowfall of the season started Tuesday night, Oct. 23, attaining a depth of eleven inches by next morning. The snow coming unexpectedly, caught many persons unawares, some of the potatoes and other vegetables not yet being brought into shelter. The trees were beautiful in their mantle of white, many of the leaves being still on the branches.

Rev. E. E. Oney preached his last sermon to his Grantsville charge to a crowded house on Sunday night at the Lutheran church. After a masterly address with texts taken from the 19th Psalm and from the 14th chapter of St. John, he spoke a few brief and tender words of farewell to his people, exhorting them to keep the faith, and speaking in warmest terms of their relations together. No announcement was made of future services but it is hoped that a successor to Rev. Oney will soon be secured.

A farewell party was given to Nevin Broadwater, who will soon be leaving for Camp Meade, last Thursday night by his sister, Mrs. Eva Bevans, at Broadwater farm. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Zeller, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Livengood, Misses Ethel and Viola Broadwater, Eva Miller, Vilda Gingerich, Marie Connor, Winifred Bonig, Beulah Bender, Katharine Crowe, Esther Engle, Maud Bevans and Helen Knecht; Messrs. Allen and Byron Bender, Olin and Hayward Broadwater, John Younkin, Clarence Durst, Frank Stanton, Jake Gnagey and Forest Beachy. "500" was the diversion, followed by most delicious refreshments.

Mrs. J. C. Grady, of Midland, Md., spent the week end with her sister, Mrs. Irene Hayes.

Mr. and Mrs. I. J. Bender spent Sunday with Mrs. Bender's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Gantt, of Frostburg.

Mrs. Mary Charles, Mrs. Annabel Brown and son Albert and Mrs. C. H. Brace, of Cumberland, spent Sunday with Miss Margaret Brown.

Dr. and Mrs. R. C. Bowen spent Saturday in Cumberland.

Mesdames W. C. Loechel, J. U. Stanton and Sara R. Getty, spent Friday as guests of the borother of the former ladies, Wm. Gnagey, and his accomplished housekeeper, Mrs. Jonas Beachy, at Maple Crest farm.

A dance was held in the hall by the young people of the town on Saturday night.

J. O. Getty spent several days of last week in Cumberland.

L. H. Diefenbach was a delegate to the Lutheran Synodical convention at Johnstown last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ross and brothers, Herman, Abe and Orron Ross, of Somerset, were Sunday guests of Mrs. Ross's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Durst.

A. F. Hetrick, of Pittsburgh, was a Grantsville visitor last week.

Oliver and George Wittig and sister, Miss Ernestine, of Frostburg, entertained a week-end party at the Ritter bungalow. The guests included Misses Ethel and Viola Broadwater and brother Olin, from Grantsville, Miss Montana, from Charleroi, Pa., and about twenty guests from Cumberland and Frostburg.

Mrs. J. U. Stanton and brother, Wm. E. Gnagey, are spending a week with their brother, Elmer Gnagey, at Newark, N. J., and sister, Mrs. Lulu Parker at Wilmington, Del.

Misses Ethel and Viola Broadwater, are spending a few days in Brownsville, Pa., with friends.

BITTINGER.

Messrs. Ray Engle, B. H. Wiley, Oscar Hetrick and Sherman Snyder, four excellent young men from this community, were called from this village on Monday of this week to go to Camp Meade for training. We feel many regrets at parting with these bright young men. Our community will miss them, yet we know that they will discharge every trust reposed in them with honor and credit. Our thoughts will be continually with them and our sympathy with the parents who gave their sons for the service of the county, but we will all be constantly hoping for their safe and speedy return.

Elias Orendorf has sold his farm to O. C. Buckle and will sell his personal property at public sale on November 14th after which Mr. Orendort with his aged wife will go to Delaware and reside with their children who are located in that state.

G. W. Engle, of Baltimore, is spending this week with his aged parents in this village.

Frank Brenneman has purchased one of those abominable creations of mechanical art, commonly called a motorcycle, and will soon establish a new speed record.

Lawrence Bittinger, of Grantsville, was a Sunday visitor to this place.

The male quartette which accompanied the Republican campaign party, were highly complimented for their performance, as well as the speakers who addressed the meeting on Monday evening.

About Your Eyes . . . . By Frederick J. Haskin

Have we all defective vision? Not all, but most of us, is the opinion of medical officers who have recently examined thousands of men for military service. In some the defect is so slight that it never gave any trouble; in others it ranges all the way from color blindness to a bad case of astigmatism. But a perfect pair of eyes is about as rare as a perfect disposition.

That is what the Army records show, and a recent examination of school children in a large Eastern city revealed something else—namely, that near-sightedness is on the increase. A surprising number of children were unable to read letters placed only a short distance from them; many admitted they had been having trouble in seeing the blackboard, and others were already wearing glasses.

The constant reading and "near" work required of school children these days is thought to be the chief cause of this calamity. Reading, particularly, focuses the eyes on a point not more than two feet away, while the human eye was devised for looking at things at some distance. Moreover, it is a greater strain on the eyes than anything else. The reason for this is explained by Dr. Edmund Burke Huey in his book. "The Psychology and Pedagogy of Reading." In reading one page, he points out, our eyes must perform perhaps 150 quick movements, while in looking at any ordinary object they perform only a fraction of that number.

Authorities who believe that reading is the chief cause of near-sightedness point to the fact that this type of defective vision is rarely found among uneducated people. Usually it is the scholar and the bookworm who must pay for their knowledge by wearing glasses. And, for the encouragement of the near-sighted, it may be stated that occasionally such men have been able to make even their lack of sight reach to their advantage. Lafcadio Hearn, for example, was said to possess only one-seventh of a man's normal eyesight—a fact taken by his biographers to account for his remarkable talent for painting word pictures. When Hearn beheld a tree he beheld only the brilhant or somber color of its foliage—he could not see each minute leaf, notch and twig, nor the ants crawling up its bark. And so he wrote—in colors—as an impressionistic artist paints a landscape, with a genius that no normal-sighted American has ever been able to equal.

On the other hand, here is G. Bernard Shaw, whose facility for shocking shocking people is claimed by his biographers to be partly due, at least, to his normal vision. An occulist once informed Mr. Shaw that his eyesight was absolutely normal, whereas that of 95 per cent. of the rest of the world was abnormal. Mr. Shaw himself admits that this is why he always sees the world the way it really is, while other people see it the way they think it is.

However, this particular genius is a notable exception to the argument that excessive reading brings on near-sightedness, for Mr. Shaw is an omnivorous reader, reading everything that has ever been written in both music and type. He is rather an instance to be quoted in the argument that defective vision of all kinds is usually hereditary and present from babyhood and not produced by eye-strain.

Not long ago a young man came to a Washington optician in the depths of despair. He had just come from the War Department, where his application for a commission had been turned down because his vision was too imperfect. He already wore glasses to correct an astigmatism, but they did not appear to be doing any good. The opitician spent two hours examining the young man's eyes, at the end of which time he wrote down his prescription. It read, "Turn lens eighth of an inch." The glasses the young man had been wearing were the correct ones, but the lens had become loosened and out of position. This difference of an eighth of an inch almost lost him his commission. With the adjusted glasses he went back to the War Department and made good on the vision test.

The defect which makes many men fail in their applications for military and naval commissions is color-blindness. This is a purely hereditary defect, largely confined to males, which makes it literally impossible for a man to see red. That is, what seems red to him does not seem red to other people, and what seems red to other people does not seem red to him—a fact which may have something to do with the otherwise unexplainable wearing of brilliantly red neckties. Color-blindness usually accompanies an otherwise clear vision, and for that reason is often not discovered until late in life. An examination of a large number of men connected with signaling work, in which the signaling was done with red and green lights, showed many to be entirely color-blind.

The value of reading cannot be overestimated, but it is exceedingly dangerous when carried on at the expense of the eyes. Around the bookish age, which usually occurs between 11 and 16—years which should be spent as much as possible in the open air—the modern school child is now often found spending his afternoons in the house reading cheap fiction. It would be well, in the opinion of medical men, if parents would pay more attention to this matter. If a child is going to strain his eyes, let it be at least upon something good, and let it be in as good a light as possible.

This advice might also be heeded by adults. There is nothing worse for the eyes than reading in a bad light, yet it is a common occurrence to come upon people poring over books in dark corners or in rooms darkened by twilight. Or, what is just as bad, they will be holding their books in the full glare of an electric light or be sitting facing a powerful light. For some mysterious psychological reason, most people seem to resent being told that they are reading in a bad light.

August F. Hetrick, vs Harrietta Hetrick No. 2141 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii for the plaintiff from the defendant.

The Bill states that the plaintiff and defendant were married in the month of May, 1907, and lived together as man and wife in Pennsylvania and State of Maryland until on or about the 12th day of January, 1913.

The Bill farther states that on or about said date that the said defendant did, without just cause or reason abandon and desert the said plaintiff, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years, and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation.

The Bill further states that no children were born to the plaintiff and defendant as a result of said marriage.

The Bill then prays for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and for other relief.

It is thereupon, this 22nd day of October, 1917, ordered, by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county once in each of four successive weeks before the 26th day of November, next, give notice to the said Harrietta Hetrick of the object and substance of this Bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 17th day of December, next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

Tuesday two more of our young men left for Camp Meade. Harvey Gortner going to the training camp and Noah Schrock to the detention camp to be held for other government work not under military rule, he being of the non resistant faith.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. and Mrs. Dye and daughter went to Florida yesterday to spend the winter.

Dr. and Mrs. Logan Carr motored to Washington, D. C., Tuesday.

Monday and Tuesday nearly everybody was busy burning leaves. About one-fifth of the Park was burned over. A general cleaning up is proposed.

The voters in the Park loyally attended the polls and cast their votes last Tuesday. The vote was light because many of the voters were distant.

Last Tuesday a farmer living some miles from the Park drove to Hotel Dennett and proceeded to load on his wagon five pieces of furniture. When loaded two gentlemen approached him and informed him that he had no right to take the furniture. He replied, "Why I was told that the owner was going to tear the building away." He was notified that that was not true and that he had better return the furniture, which he did, giving his name and address. Mr. [illegible] has charge of the hotel property and is gathering up the names of those who took or hauled furniture, etc. from the hotel. The list is growing quite large.

Considerable improvements are being made to Maryland Inn. New porches, plumbed for gas, etc.

Sub-grading is progressing nicely on the State road. A few days of good weather will give us the road to use this winter. The road bed is completed to the bridge. Tuesday "Bert" Leighton had a good force of men pushing the work.

Herbert Leighton went to Clarksburg, W. Va., Tuesday morning where he has accepted a position in Loar and White's store.

Wednesday was wheatless day in a number of homes. Cornmeal took the place of flour. "Do without sugar one meal on Mondays," has some observers here.

BLOOMINGTON

Rev. Ronalds Taylor, of Westernport, rector of St. James Episcopal church, was a guest of friends on Monday.

Mr. W. G. Henderson, of Washington, D. C., beneficiary of the Wm. Moody estate, was in town on Monday looking after his property.

Mr. John Elliott, representative of Bloomington Lodge, I. O. O. F., attended the meeting of District Deputies, held at Barton on last Tuesday night.

Mr. Harry Kight, the well known young business man of Barnum, deserves a great deal of credit for his enthusiasm in the interest of the sale of Liberty Bonds. During the campaign he sold and subscribed for $5,100 worth. Quite a nice little sum for Uncle Sam.

Well, what do you think of this for Bloomington patriotism? It surely is going some. After Mrs. E. Z. Tower, of Oakland, chairman of the Red Cross Chapter of Garrett county, had made a house to house canvass of our town in the interest of a branch in this place, selected or secured a meeting place, appointed the evening and hour for holding the same, there were only three persons present. No, we are not German sympathizers nor are we slackers. Apathy, apathy, that infernal organism that crawls into our veins and make cowards of us all.

Bloomington Council No. 73, D. of A., held a most enthusiastic meeting on last Tuesday night at Junior hall in this place. It was the end of an energetic drive made by its members to increase the roster, and one of the most successful ever inaugurated by the council. The hall was crowded, many visiting members from Westernport, Barton and Piedmont witnessed the beautiful ceremonies staged by a picked and well drilled team under the direction of Mrs. James Spence, captain. After the close of council, tables were spread and a most appetizing banquet entertained the members until a late hour.

FLATWOODS

The farmers are all busy doing their fall plowing and husking corn.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Keller and son George, spent Sunday the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Speicher, of Accident.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Alexander and family visited relatives at New Germany Sunday.

Among those that spent Sunday at B. M. Keller's were Mr. and Mrs. John Savage, of Sang Run; Misses Anna Alexander and Sarah Savage and Wayne Smith.

Mr. L. L. Savage is very busy making mine props on the Weller property which he purchased recently.

Mr. John Fresh and daughter, Ethel, spent a few days in Frostburg last week.

Mrs. F. V. McGettigan and Miss Agnes Holtschneider spent Sunday with Prema and Dora Schlossnagle.

Misses Anna, Nellie, and Lloyd and Willie Alexander spent Monday evening at the home of B. M. Keller.

Huge Buildings For Offices at Washington.

One of the manifold problems presented by the war is that of furnishing adequate office accommodations for the thousands of additional officials, clerks, and other Federal servants who are pouring into Washington. The Government is exercising its prerogative in this direction and has commandeered conveniently located office buildings and apartment houses with a free hand. In addition, it is erecting huge temporary structures for use as offices, and in the building of these contractors are breaking time records for construction work. A building to house the six hundred officials and clerks of the Council of National Defense, containing more than 100,000 square feet of floor space, was erected and fully equipped in fifty three days. Similar buildings nearby are for the use of the forces of the Food Administration, Fuel Administration, and Army Ordnance, Work is well under way on a mammoth structure which will cover three city blocks to house the overflow of the War and Navy Departments, the contract for which calls for completion in four months.

By these methods the Government keeps in advance of its actual needs. At the present rate of increase the usual 35,000 Federal employees in Washington will be more than doubled if the war continues another year. Workers of all kinds are being appointed, stenographers and typewriters and draftsmen for the service generally, and what are known as schedule clerks, index and catalogue clerks, clerks qualified in statistics or accounting, and clerks qualified in business administration for the Ordnance Department of the Army, being in great demand.

Representatives of the Federal civil service commission at the post offices in all cities are the official recruiting agents for the great civilian army, an army of a half million behind the men behind the guns.

The object of the petition filed in the above entitled cause is to procure a decree for the dissolution of the above named Garrett Publishing Company of Garrett county, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland, and the winding up of its affairs.

Seed Wheat.

We have for sale a large quantity of the now well known Miracle Wheat, which yielded for us last year at the rate of 40 bushels per acre. It is a hard red berry, rich in gluten and possesses very superior tilling qualities. Straw medium height, very stiff and almost proof against lodging.

We advise sowing in this section September 1st to 20th, the earlier, the better. In low altitudes one half bushel is sufficient to seed an acre, but where the winters are severe as in this locality we advise 4 to 5 pecks per acre, according to the time sown.

Choice recleaned seed ready now. Price $3.00 per bushel.

P. C. BOUCHER NEW SURVEYOR

A Quiet Campaign Set On Foot Resulted In His Election.

P. C. Boucher, of Grantsville district, although not a candidate, was elected by the Republicans at the regular election on last Tuesday as County Surveyor for Garrett county.

Neither the Republicans nor Democrats had a candidate in the field for this office. The Republicans, seeing an opportunity to select one of their number for the office, passed the word along very quietly to a few friends in each district where Mr. Boucher was known with the result that he received 33 votes, while Mr. Mason, a Democrat, was voted for by 28 of his party friends, thus giving Mr. Boucher a majority of five votes.

His election was certified by the Board of Election Supervisors at the meeting of that body on last Thursday and Mr. Boucher will receive his commission as surveyor of the county.

PROGRESS IN Y. M. C. A. CAMPAIGN

Excellent Prospects For Raising County's Quota of $1840.

Chairman W. R. Offutt, of the Y. M. C. A. War Work Fund Campaign and his assistants have put in a busy week organizing movement in different sections of the county.

A meeting was held in Crellin last Friday evening, addresses explaining the cause being made by Messrs. Offuttt, Renninger and Rev. W. M. Shultz, a permanent organization being effected headed by Mr. Emroy W. Adams, of that place, as chairman. Sunday afternoon another big meeting was addressed in that place by Rev. W. M. Shultz, which resulted in subscriptions totaling nearly $400.

Rev. Dr. Archibald Moore was in Grantsville last Saturday and organized that locality, many of the prominent citizens becoming interested in the movement.

Friendsville has also been organized, with Postmaster C. V. Guard as chairman, and the work is progressing nicely at that place.

Chairman Offutt, Atty. J. C. Renninger and Revs. A. D. Appleton and S. E. Wicker made speeches at Accident and Deer Park during the week, resulting in securing the co-operation of the leading residents of these places in the work.

Reports received at the office of Chairman Offutt indicate that Garrett county will not be on the "slacker" side of the fence when the returns are reported at the end of this week. This paper will, if possible, publish a full list of subscriptions received when all are reported.

The work as it is now planned will be chiefly that of meat canning and the utilization of substitutes of different kinds. In view of the fact that we are advised to eat less wheat, special baking demonstrations, using available substitutes, will be given. Recipes using substitutes for sugar will be given.

Demands are coming in for these demonstrations to take place throughout the county in many communities. However, as the time is limited only a few places can be visited. British Grain Ship Destroyed in Great Fire Along Waterfront of Baltimore

Incendiary plotters are believed to have caused the $5,000,000 fire which swept part of the water front at Baltimore recently and destroyed the steamship Kerry Range, laden with grain for the British Government. The blaze was probably the most spectacular that has been seen in the Maryland port in years. The fire spread quickly along the docks and the Kerry Range, moored between two of the blazing piers, was fairly enveloped before she was released and drawn into midstream by fire boats. The picture shows her ablaze, with the smoke of the fire darkening the skies. The chief gunner was killed on board and many are missing.

War Social Hygiene . . . . . By Frederick J. Haskin

The prevalence of veneral diseases has long been a world problem in hygiene, the solution of which is made exceedingly difficult by prudery and politics. From a scientific viewpoint these diseases constitute the one group of communicable maladies against which civilized society has built no organized defense.

The devasting effect of veneral disease upon the efficiency of armies has been terribly demonstrated in Europe during the present war. Although no exact figures are available, it is stated on good authority that one of the powers engaged had more soldiers incapacitated by these diseases than by the casualties of battle during the early stages of the war. Another reliable report is that 70,000 cases of venereal disease existed at one time in one of the Allied armies, while 40 per cent. of some of the Entente regiments were infected.

The United States government had an impressive experience of this evil during the disorder of a hasty mobilization, when troops were first sent to the Mexican border. The War Department in this case announced a policy which was opposed to the toleration of commercialized vice in the neighborhood of military camps; but it had no adequate powers whereby to enforce this policy and was further hampered by the existing military tradition on the subject. This tradition in practically all countries has been that commercialized vice is a necessary evil of military life. The result was that in the vicinities of many of the border camps commercialized vice flourished.

Long rows of buildings were erected for the express purpose of harboring vicious women. In some instances soldiers were stationed as guards in these buildings and in the restricted areas. In at least two instances houses were established within the lines of military camps and under military control.

Such were conditions on the border at their worst. The War Department had also examples of how repressive measures work for military efficiency. One of these was a large camp in the vicinity of two small towns. Here saloons and disorderly houses tried to establish themselves, but were promptly suppressed by the commanding officer, who did not technically have the authority to do so but assumed it on the ground of military efficiency. One saloonkeeper defied this officer and opened his doors. A guard was stationed at this establishment to see that it was not patronized by any soldiers. After a week with no business the saloon was closed. Public women in these towns were given one hour to pack their belongings and were then escorted to the train.

This officer's experiment in the repression of vice showed that from a military point-of-view such measures are practicable and effective. There was very little venereal disease in this command, nor was any discontent evident. On the contrary, the men were wont to express pride in the fact that they belonged to a "clean bunch."

The experiment proved what students of vice have long known, that the existence of open establishments for that purpose attract many men who would not otherwise be exposed to disease and also lowers the morale of a military camp or other large body of men in its vicinity.

Convinced by this experience on the Mexican border and by the European example, that commercialized vice weakens an army, often more than the bullets of the enemy, and that it can be successfully suppressed, the administration had inserted in the National Army bill two sections which give the President broad powers over the environments of camps. These sections (12 and 13 in the Army bill of May 18, 1917) give the Secretary of War power to "do everything by him deemed necessary" to protect men in military training from vice. These powers were later extended to the Secretary of the Navy.

Thus was placed in the hands of the executive branch of the government practically absolute power over commercialized vice, insofar as it can possibly affect the military establishments. This legislation constitutes a revolutionary step in the solution of this great military problem, and one which is having far-reaching effect upon the whole problem of the control of venereal disease.

Regulations for the enforcement of this law were immediately framed by the War Department, and Secretary Baker wrote a letter to the governor of each state, in which he expressed his determination to enforce these regulations absolutely, and added that in case conditions were not satisfactory in the vicinity of any camp that camp would be moved. This latter threat of course, gave the Secretary an immense leverage by its appeal to local-self-interest.

In spite of the drastic character of these regulations and the forthright expressions of the Secretary's letter, there were men both in civil life and in the Army who could not believe that the time-honored policy of tolerating the ravages of deadly communicable diseases as a necessary evil was really to be changed.

The now historic case of a certain Southern city is in point. As a camp was to be located near that city, the Secretary of War wrote to the mayor, stating that commercialized vice must first be eradicated. The mayor replied expressing his ignorance of the existence of any such evil in his city. The Secretary thereupon sent two Federal investigators, who obtained exact figures showing that there were a number of vile houses, and giving the names of the occupants, the prices charged. The mayor was greatly enlightened. This city has been cleaning house ever since. The camp has been moved, but not because of conditions in the city.

Such incidents have gone far to convince all concerned that the War Department is in earnest in its intention to remove the menace of commercial vice from the vicinity of its training camps. Meantime, the actual work of eradication is going forward with an energy and thoughtfulness that is even more convincing.

A Virginia Murder.

To the Editor of The Republican:

In a late issue of the Baltimore Sun appeared a paragraph referring to a murder in Goochland County, Virginia, the native county of the writer, and only about nine miles up the James river from the home of his ancestors. Subsequent evidence abundant in the locality shows this to be the most brutal and unnatural murder recalled in the criminology of either that county or State. The community of this inhuman atrocity would be justly accepted as a denial, in its self, to so foul an aspersion upon a name kept clean before those who have known it for generations. Elk Hill, the scene of the tragic deed and the former home of the Harrisons, is in an agricultural section of fertile soil and stately mansions, populated by a people distinguished during more than a century for such culture and refinement, hospitality and gentle breeding as would keep it secure from the shadow or touch of crime. Erected upon a commanding prominence, the residence is circled by the river which fade away with the brightness of a silvery sheen in the eastward sweep of forty miles to Richmond.

Some three years back, it is said, two brothers of pleasant mien and courtly bearing, came from the West, Judge A. P. Chamberlain an aged bachelor; and Dr. A. W. Chamberlain a younger brother about sixty years of age and married. The two brothers purchased Elk Hill in common. Disagreement so estranging arose between the two that Judge Chamberlain moved away and secured nearby quarters. It is known that Dr. Chamberlain owed his elder brother a disputed sum of about eighteen hundred dollars. Mrs. Chamberlain, wife of the Dr. was home on a visit to the West, leaving the Dr. the only occupant of the home. By an appointment the Judge made a visit one evening to his brother with the view, it is stated, of a compromised settlement of the debt and the Dr. says he holds the signed receipt, from his dead brother, for the full amount paid that fateful night in adjustment. Family domestics saw Judge Chamberlain in the home that evening and that was the last time he was seen alive. Aware of friction that had reached the court involving the two brothers, neighbors regarded the disappearance of Judge Chamberlain from his place in their midst with questioning suspicions. The Dr. spoke lightly of the absence, explaining that his brother, a very old man, had gone West to "see his girl." Under the eye of scrutiny suspicions grew to a belief so grave that the Dr. was arrested and incarcerated in the court house jail nine miles down the river.

A close investigation of the Elk Hill surroundings resulted in undeniable proof of a most fiendish revolting murder. Judge Chamberlain had not only been murdered but the body had been decapited, dismembered and savagely mutilated, with the dissected parts sunk in the earth at different places, some of them in old out houses. The sickening enormities of such gastly discoveries so angered and excited the people that Dr. Chamberlain was ordered from the county prision for safer custody in the Henrico jail at Richmond, where he strictly denies any knowledge of this terrible deed and asserts that some one through the unshaded window, must have seen the money paid and then perpetrated the deed for the help it would yield. A gold watch, known to be one that was worn by Judge Chamberlain, was found concealed in an upper room of the Elk Hill house.

This well remembered place induces an indulgence of a backward digression of more than half a century.

At the close of the memorable winter of 1865, a thoroughly equipped body of Federal cavalry raided this part of Virginia and for several days were in camp just above the Elk Hill estate, in a fruitless effort to break up and make useless the old James River Canal, then of such vital importance to the Confederacy, freighting supplise from the mountain region to the army of Lee on the lines between Richmond and Petersburg.

At an early hour one morning this writer, with three as ready and daring troopers as ever backed a horse or faced a foe, rode through the hostile lines to the Elk Hill home, then occupied by the Harrison family. Just as we were walking in to breakfast there was a Federal yell and a cavalry charge upon the house from the low slopes along the canal. We were quick in the saddle and dashing for escape down the steep road, followed by a troop of fifty or more, the foremost shooting from their horses at full speed. We could hear the sing of the bullets and see puffs of dust dashed by the dipping minnie balls; but they accomplished nothing more serious than very greatly accelerating the speed of the departing guests. Of that four this one alone lives today and how vividly it all comes back in this hour from the mist of more than fifty-two years. A full account written of the venture would not be wanting in interest.

RELLIN.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

The Security of Believers.

In speaking of this in my former letter, I closed by emphasizing the necessity of trusting the Lord.

An unfaltering trust in the Lord is a cure for anxiety and a cause of peace and joy. Jehovah supports the earth and all that is in it. What a basis of peace is laid for us in trust. He controls all. If we were in the power of chance, our case would be gloomy enough. Were we in the hands of men our case would often be humilating, fearful and conflicting. When saints fail to trust the Lord they get themselves into straits.

Witness David fleeing from Saul. He is disappointed in his expectation from man. He fled to Samuel; he is then sent to Jonathan and thence to Abimelech who is afraid at his coming and can't trust him. With no place in Israel to flee from the fury of Saul, he goes to Achish one of the princes of the Philistines. There he was recognized, becomes afraid and feignes madness. As he leaves Gath and comes alone to the cave of Adullam, he is stripped of all dependence upon man and is cast upon God. That this was a blessing to him, is evident from the 34th Psalm which he wrote as expressive of his experiences.

The songs of the cave are the sweetest that came from David's pen. No the Lord begins to work for David, and to bring around him those who would protect him from enemies and help defend Israel. While he was running about the country trying to get men to help him, lying to Abimelech and playing the fool before Achish, God let him alone until he was tired out, but when he lay down to rest in the cave, "then the angel of the Lord encamped round about him. The Lord was leading David and sometimes the best way is to give, as He often does to us, plenty of rope just to allow us to see how weak and foolish we we are. The Lord will protect his subjects. He will overthrow the adversaries. They shall be broken in pieces, whoever it be that contendeth with him." The word here has reference to contentions in a court of law at the same time keeping the administration of justice in view. So it continues, Jehovah seated on his throne in heaven, shall as the supreme judge, utter the sentence.

He will overthrow the adversaries of his saints, his pious ones. It will be certain, unexpected and complete, for they shall be broken to pieces. It shall also be in such a way as to be in a very marked manner indicative of the interposition of the divine power. His word is pledged for the security of believers. We naturally wonder how He will do this? He will provide the means for their helps. He gives them his word which is an instrument of guidance. The meek, will He guide in judgment—in the right way wherein they should walk—and the meek will He teach his way. If you say "with judgment," then it is a wise and provident care, and a due regard to all their circumstances. "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go. I will guide thee with mine eye." I will be unto thee instead of eyes, to direct and caution thee.

He will deal with us as a master does with a scholar or a guide doth him that knoweth not the right way. The Psalmist says, "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel," that is, by his gracious providences; by his word, which will "open my eyes to understand and see wondrous things out of thy law." By His holy spirit sanctifying and directing me in the whole course of my life. The prophet Isiah says, "and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry and satisfy the afflicted soul, then shall thy light arise in obscurity and thy darkness be as the noon day, and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in draught, or dry places, and make fat thy bones, and thou shalt be like a watered garden and like a spring of water whose waters fail not." This suggests the refreshing power of his word. His word is also an instrument of defence." Job said, "the Almighty shall be thy defense." The Psalmist said, "my defense is of God which saveth the upright in heart." Another recognized and essential means of keeping his saints is by prayer. This is a mighty help, yet is ignored or allowed to fall into disuse by too many saints. Thus they slip back into the ways of the world. He helps believers by the fellowship of those who are traveling the same way. He helps by the ministration of angels. "Are not all ministering, for service, being sent forth on account of those being about to inherit salvation?"

He keeps his saints by watching over them at every step. They are not alone. They are kept by the power of God. He who created all things; who numbers the stars, which are so exact in their course, that astronomers can calculate with unerring precision, their return.

Surely He can keep our poor souls in their orbit, when we desire his keeping. In spite of the free action of human will, warped and rebllious as they are, He carries out his plans and secures the results determined upon from eternity. Thou his people, the Jews, are scattered to day among the nations of the earth, they are not absorbed. Though isolated and alone they are kept for future honor and glory, and He can keep his saints who constitute the church. Surely the true believer is secure with such care and watchfulness pledged, and we may rest in perfect confidence that nothing shall be able to pluck out of his hand.

A Medicine for Women

For Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has Relieved the Sufferings of Women.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

Mrs. Kieso Cured After Seven Month's Illness.

Aurora, Ill.—"For seven long months I suffered from a female trouble, with severe pains in my back and sides until I became so weak I could hardly walk from chair to chair, and got so nervous I would jump at the slightest noise. I was entirely unfit to do my house work, I was giving up hope of ever being well, when my sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took six bottles and today I am a healthy woman able to do my own housework. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and find out for herself how good it is."—Mrs. Karl A. Kieso, 596 North Ave., Aurora, Ill.

Could Hardly Get Off Her Bed.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—"I want you to know the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was in such bad health from female troubles that I could hardly get off my bed. I had been doctoring for a long time and my mother said, 'I want you to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.' So I did, and it has certainly made me a well woman. I am able to do my house work and am so happy as I never expected to go around the way I do again, and I want others to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. Josie Copner, 1668 Harrison Ave., Fairmount, Cincinnati, Ohio.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

The Retort.

"Two wrongs don't make a right. Still"—

A senator was discussing the food control bill.

"While the bill has its drawbacks," he went on, "there would be worse drawbacks without it, and so we can face our opponents like the lady.

"She smiled sweetly.

"'And you, dear,' she retorted, 'spend all yours getting your nose red.'"

Don't Neglect Kidneys

Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Prescription, Overcomes Kidney Trouble

It is now conceded by physicians that the kidneys should have more attention as they control the other organs to a remarkable degree and do a tremendous amount of work in removing the poisons and waste matter from the system by filtering the blood.

The kidneys should receive some assistance when needed. We take less exercise, drink less water and often eat more rich, heavy food, thereby forcing the kidneys to do more work than nature intended. Evidence of kidney trouble, such as lame back, annoying bladder troubles, smarting or burning, brick-dust or sediment, sallow complexion, rheumatism, maybe weak or irregular heart action, warns you that your kidneys require help immediately to avoid more serious trouble.

An ideal herbal compound that has had most remarkable success as a kidney and bladder remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. There is nothing else like it. It is Dr. Kilmer's prescription used in private practice and it is sure to benefit you. Get a bottle from your druggist.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper. Adv.

His Sensitive Soul.

George Challis, owner of a theater in Muncie, Ind., believes that the craving for passes to shows becomes a mania, and relates a case in point, according to the Indianapolis News. He had been besieged for weeks by a man for passes to shows in the theater, and two or three times, just to get rid of him, had passed him in, which only seemed to make him the more insistent the next time, although Challis was under no obligation to him. Finally the fellow struck Challis one day when the latter was suffering from the effects of a "poor house" the night before, and, exasperated, he reached down in his pocket and handing the importuning one a dollar, said, "Go over there to the box office and buy yourself a ticket like other people do." Puffing up, his dignity ruffled and his feelings apparently hurt, the other replied, "What do you take me for—a cheap skate?" And then haughtily walked away—with Challis' dollar in his pocket.

Wireless Air Raid Warning.

The London Daily Chronicle reports that Mr. Thorp Hincks has devised apparatus for giving warnings of impending air raids. It is claimed to be especially applicable to factories and public buildings. An electric resonator is placed on the roof, and on the sound of a given pitch being produced, the resonator causes a bell to ring in the building until it is stopped. It is said that large areas, such for instance as the whole of a city, can be simultaneously and instantaneously warned.—Scientific American.

Mrs. Olga Kohler Florman of New York has been drawing $25,000 annually from the state of her father, but she asks an increase because she has gone in debt. She alleged that her husband earned only $60 a week and that she had to contribute to the support of an infant son. The court allowed her a bonus of $120,000.

GERMANS BRIBED THE UMPIRE

Carl Emil Junck Tells How Teutons Are Tricky in Other Ways Than in War.

Carl Emil Junck, a dye importer of Chicago, was talking about Germany.

"The German spirit today is tricky, shifty and false," he said. "The Germans today think it's clever to cheat. Their war, with its violation of every war law and every international agreement, is a cheating war.

"Here is an illustration of the German spirit.

"When I lived in Elberfeld I organized a football team among the Elberfeld boys. Once, when the team was to play a neighboring team, I gave the boys 100 marks to buy shoes, leg guards or whatever would most help them to win.

"Well, they won, but their shoes and leg guards were very old and shabby, and I said to the captain after the game:

"'Glad you licked 'em, though certainly some of the decisions were close. But what did you do with the money I gave you?'

"The captain answered with a knowing smile:

"'You said, Herr Junck, that we were to use the money in any way that would best help us to win; so of course we made a present of it to the umpire.'"

Despite the Price.

"Revenge is sweet."

"All I know about revenge is this. There's less of it actually had than almost any commodity you can name."

WRIGLEY'S

WORDS LOST THEIR FORCE

Schwab Should Have Spoken Into Phonograph, He Is Told, When Discussing His Speech.

A banker who was told that Charles M. Schwab, the president of the Bethlehem Steel works, was one of the most forceful speakers ever heard at a banquet table, said he believed it, and then told this story:

About the time that Schwab was buying Bethlehem steel, and had made arrangements with Pliny Fisk of New York, to handle the bonds, he went over to New York, and, of course, was entertained at a dinner. There he made one of his most forceful utterances. Mr. Fisk was moved to such an extent that he said to Mr. Schwab: "That will sell the bonds. Only, you should write it out for me when you return, so I shall have an accurate statement."

Mr. Schwab wrote out his remarks as soon as he got back to his home and sent them to Mr. Fisk.

Mr. Fisk saw him soon afterward, and said: "Why didn't you write me what you said?"

"I did," responded the steel master, "I wrote the exact words."

"Well," answered Mr. Fisk, much disconcerted, "you should have spoken them into a phonograph."

What's the Use?

"I have been reflecting," said an old-timer, "upon the case of the average man, as his neighbors see him.

"If he is poor, he is a bad manager. If he is prosperous, everyone wants to do him a favor.

"If he is in politics, it's for pork. If he is not in politics, one can't place him, and he's no good for his country.

"If he gives not to charity, then he's a stingy dog. If he does give, it's for show.

"If he is active in religion, he is a hypocrite. If he evinces no interest in matters spiritual, he's a hardened sinner.

"If he shows affection, he's a soft sentimentalist. If he seems to care for no one, he's cold-blooded.

"If he dies young, there was a great future ahead of him. If he attains old age, he has missed his calling."

Edward Alcott's voice was recognized over the 'phone in New York the other day by his pet parrot.

It pays better to appreciate fools than to be appreciated by fools.

Mental Preparedness.

"Children trained from the very start to self-expression enter school with invaluable mental preparedness for the work to be done there. They have a poise that keeps them from being diffident in class. They are not afraid to ask questions, declares a prominent educator. They know how to tell what is in their mind. In associating with other children they get more joy from it because they know how to make themselves understood. Older people find them more charming and interesting.

"Effective training toward self-expression in the young child means that characteristic for life, and there is no training more effective than telling him stories and teaching him how to tell them.

"Asking about a child's doings will encourage him to tell you about them.

"For instance, when your little boy comes home from a walk get him to tell you all that he has seen while out. When he comes in from play get him to tell you all about the fun he has been having.

"Always make him feel your vital interest in his thoughts and actions."

Painful.

"I've taken a vow not to talk about the war."

"How old are you?"

THE PRESIDENT TO UNION LABOR.

Organized labor cannot fail to be impressed by President Wilson's address to the American Federation of Labor convention in Buffalo, N. Y. The question is will it be impressed aright? Did the delegates and will the union workingmen of the country understand the President as he hoped to be understood? It cannot be gainsaid that Mr. Wilson took a risk in framing his appeal to the industrial forces of the United States in the terms he chose. He spoke of, to and for the ideal spirit of America. We hope his words found lodgement as intended, that they will germinate and spring into that flower of co-operation to the advancement of our highest interests, in the war and peace both, of which we are so much in want.

In "counselling" as he did with the representative body of the greatest organization of labor in the world, President Wilson did a unique thing. Perhaps it is necessary, at this time. But was it necessary, politic or wise, to set organized labor apart as a class especially deserving of the consideration and gratitude of the public and the government? The statesman essayed an appeal to patriotism; it is statesmanlike to employ phrases which are susceptible of interpretation as tacit, if not direct, approval of hatred of "capitalism?" To smooth the fur of labor the while one prods the other party to our industrial might is not conducive to that accommodation and mutual good will which must be relied upon to promote the fullest measure of justice and produce that sincere cooperation which is essential to our success in the war and our happiness in peace. "Stand together" must be our slogan if we are to get anywhere as a nation fighting the hideous forces with which we are in combat. But all of us must stand together, not merely organized labor, not merely capitalists, but labor and capital and all others who are Americans in spirit and in fact. In singling out organized labor as a class to be coddled the President came close to questioning the patriotism of that large fraction of the working people of the United States.

"While we are fighting for freedom we must see, among other things, that labor is free, and that means a number of interesting things," said the President. He is right. But there are more sides to the question than the few he enumerated. The nation's necessities must not be made the excuse for depriving labor of anything which it has won nor of checking the instrumentality which conditions of labor are improved, he said. There is no likelihood they will be. But the truce in the labor struggle so desirable during the war against autocracy is misnamed if it contemplates sacrifice by one side only.

The real reason why labor of all kinds should stand unitedly behind the government in the war were stated by the President in his exposition of the German system and the German war aims as they would affect the industrialism of the world were they established by German success in the field. They clearly indicate our cause is the cause of all our people. We are hopeful that organized labor will see it in that light. It would be deplorable, perhaps fatal to our success, were it to construe the President's words as encouragement to pursue its selfish aims at a time when every incitement should be of unselfish patriotism.

SPEED THE SHIPS

Sometime ago there was a German-circulated story found in some of the newspapers that because of alleged lessening of the submarine peril the investors in shipping in this country—the Wall Street financiers—were gravely concerned over the United States' program for stimulated ship building. The story intimated that the authorities were now in doubt as to the advisability of this great program, with so much money tied up in ships after the war.

This was all wrong. There never has been a moment when the country did not feel as though the outcome of the war depended upon the United States's success in supplying ships. Lord Norcliffe and the head of the British shipbuilding commission as well have recently given strong intimations of the necessity for this country to speed its ships.

Admiral Capps has been a successful man in all the capacities in which he has featured, but he did not have the business experience and power for organization required for the head of the Shipping Board. Hence the appointment of a successor of the widest business experience and of such men as his associates will be looked upon as in no sense a rebuff for Admiral Capps, but as in behest to national needs.

Now for speeding the ships. The slow Southern lumbermen have not been able to supply pine equal to the need. The Oregon interests are now being engaged to supply Oregon fir, and transportation will be assured the shipments, so that the shipyards will be amply supplied with this necessity either for the wooden or the steel ships. Speed the ships, is now the slogan of the country.

THANKSGIVING

Proclamation Setting The 29th Inst. Issued by President.

The proclamation, fixing Thursday, November 29, as Thanksgiving Day, follows:

"Thanksgiving, 1917."

By the President of the United States of America:

A Proclamation.

"It has long been the honored custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. That custom we can follow now, even in the midst of the tragedy of a world shaken by war and immeasurable disaster, in the midst of sorrow and great peril, because even amidst the darkness that has gathered about us we can see the great blessings God has bestowed upon us, blessings that are better than mere peace of mind and prosperity of enterprise.

"We have been given the opportunity to serve mankind as we once served ourselves in the great day of our Declaration of Independence, by taking up arms against a tyranny that threatened to master and debase men everywhere, and joining with other free people in demanding for all the nations of the world what we then demanded and obtained for ourselves. In this day of the revelation of our duty not only to defend our own rights as a nation, but to defend also the rights of free men throughout the world, there has been vouchsafed us in full and inspiring measure the resolution and spirit of united action. We have been brought to one mind and purpose. A new vigor of common counsel and common action has been revealed in us. We should especially thank God that in such circumstances, in the midst of the greatest enterprise the spirits of men have ever entered upon, we have, if we but observe a reasonable and practicable economy, abundance with which to supply the needs of those associated with us as well as our own. A new light shines about us. The great duties of a new day awaken a new and greater national spirit in us. We shall never again be divided or wonder what stuff we are made of.

"And while we render thanks for these things, let us pray Almighty God that, in all humbleness of spirit, we may look always to Him for guidance; that we may be kept constant in the spirit and purpose of service; that by His grace our minds may be directed and our hands strengthened, and that in His good time liberty and security and peace and comradeship of a common justice may be vouchsafed all the nations of the earth.

"Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease upon that day from their ordinary occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to God, the great ruler of nations.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done in the District of Columbia this 7th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-second.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

"ROBERT LANSING,
"Secretary of State."

Protect Your Boy

This is written to every father, to every mother, to every brother, to every sister, to every uncle, to every aunt, to everybody who has a boy that he or she loves.

Your boy is either at the front, or in the camps, or waiting to be sent to the camps—which means that some day he will be sent to the front; for Germany is a nation as strong as it is cruel, as powerful as it is merciless; and this war, which we must fight or become, as Belgium has become, a nation of corpses and slaves, will take all of our men, all our money, all our fortitude to win.

You loved your boy when he was at home, didn't you? You did for him all that love, and care, and kindness, and tenderness, and devotion could do to keep him straight, and clean, and happy. . . . . You loved him that he was yours. He loved you for the love you gave him.

Now he has gone, or is going, away. It is right that he should go. It is God's will that he should go. He goes to defend you whom he loves against those that would rape and rob and kill; that would make this land of ours a shambles and a shame; that would make the words "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," a bloody sneer against the vast background of time.

And now, as he goes, you must say to him, "God bless you, and bring you safely back to us!" . . . You kiss. . . . Your hand lingers in his—lingers, quivering—and then withdraws. . . . . And he has gone. . . .

He has left you. For a time he has gone from your life and you from him. . . .

He will be exposed to many temptations—even as would you at his age. Many men and many women will try in many ways to tempt him to do the things that he should not. Life is life; and to be human, and young, is to be all that the words human, and young mean. . . .

But there is one way in which you can still be with him—by which the hand of yours that aided his baby footsteps—that helped him in his little lessons of primer and of arithmetic—that guided him past childish dangers—can still reach out to help him.

BETTER THAN WE, THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION REALIZES THE POWER OF EVIL ASSOCIATES, OF ROTTEN ENVIRONMENT, OF THE SUDDEN DANGERS THAT ARE BOUND TO PITFALL THE ROAD OF THOSE THAT ARE HUMAN, AND YOUNG.

These men want to give your boy the things that you, who love him, can no longer give him. They want to give him the loving care that you can no longer give him. They want to give him clean places to live in, clean books to read, clean games to amuse, clean music to hear and sing, clean drinks to drink, clean associations with whom to associate. They want to send him back to you as honest, as fearless, as gentle, as clean as when he left you.

To give him these things, this attention, this love, this care, will take money. These people that would do it, do not want your money for themselves. They want your money only that it may be spent in caring for your boy. They can now do what you no longer can. Will you help them to do this thing? Or will you, now that your boy has gone far away, turn your back and leave him to be stained, and coarsened, and corrupted in the hands of those who would exploit him in sin for profit, and in corruption for a price?

Evil women, rotten men, and the counterfeit joys that dwell in the glittering hell holes beset the path of every young male human being in the world.

Protect your boys from these things now. . . . Or else don't blame him too harshly if a different boy comes back to you from the boy who went away.

WILL SIMPLIFY DRAFT

Men With Better Known Liability to Service.

At Washington on Monday copies of the new Army draft regulations came off the press for a final reading preparatory to mailing to the local exemption boards throughout the country. They will be in the hands of all boards next week to govern all future drafts.

Under the new plan the burden of supplying information which will result in his being placed in his proper classification under the selective draft law rests squarely upon the individual registrant. All instructions now in the hands of the boards will be annulled upon the receipt of the new regulations, which are greatly reduced in extent and simplified in process.

Included in the new book is everything bearing on the draft processes as now organized, from the time the questionnaire to be sent to each registrant and filled out and returned to the boards until accepted men are actually in the military service. Each book carries a copy of the statutes and also a verified list of the drawings.

The questionnarie is the basis of the plan of grouping registrants in five classes, liable for duty by classes. The boards will be able to classify a man immediately when his questionnaire has been received.

The questionnaire process will eliminate from consideration for military service probably 95 per cent. of the men who would have been discharged or exempted under the old plan. Under the first call the average board was compelled to examine five men to obtain one for service. In some cases not more than one out of 10 or 12 were sent to the camps.

It is expected that under the new scheme the average figures will be reversed, and at most, not more than one man in five called up will fail to pass his physical examination and be rejected.

The American Bar Association and the American Medical Association are at work now organizing the lawyers and doctors to aid registrants in their vicinity in filling out their questionnaires. With the aid of these associations it is hoped a high percentage of the questionnaires will come back in such form that the boards will have little more than a rubber stamp proceeding left to select the men to fill any call.

Not a Shiver Can Get In!

There isn't an icy blast from the great Northwest that can cool down a Caloric heated house below the comfort point!

Thousands of contented Caloric owners would tell you this if you could ask them. We know because hundreds have written unsolicited letters, saying that the Caloric outheats any furnace, boiler or stove they ever knew of, and uses less fuel doing it.

These letters and thousands of other pleased owners are direct and unquestionable evidence that the

PIPELESS CALORIC FURNACE

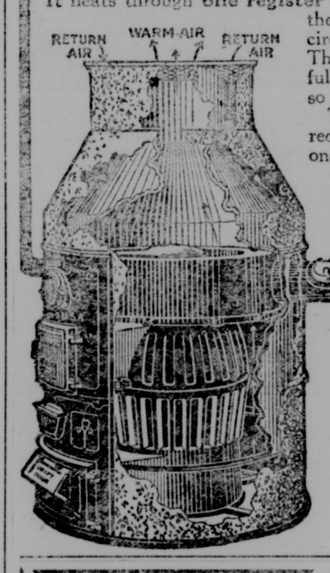
is a wonderful and economic heater; but the best evidence you can get is to install one yourself and experience its comfort in your own home.

The Caloric can be installed in an old house as well as a new. It heats through one register directly up from the cellar into the house, where the warm air circulates to the farthest corner. This is the most natural and healthful way to heat a home—Science says so and Experience proves it true.



The Caloric is guaranteed to reduce your fuel bill by at least one-third. It has a patented triple casing and dead air space (no pipeless furnace can succeed without this) which effectually prevents heat radiation into the cellar—hence fruits and vegetables keep well in a Caloric heated home.

Don't live another winter in a home too cool for health and comfort. Don't continue to burn costly fuel without an adequate return. Install a Caloric and be happy! Come in and see it.

AT CAMP MEADE

Garrett's Last Contingent Arrived at Cantonment.

Nov. 10th, 1917

To the Editor of The Republican:

Feeling sure you and the readers of your paper will be glad to hear from the boys down here, I will endeavor to tell you something about us.

We all arrived safely and well. Of course some of us were a little tired. The boys have taken up the training with a vim and vigor that is surprising. Every one seems to be in a hurry to train up and get "over there" and have the "thing" over. Thursday we took the physical examination was vaccinated and given one dose of Mence a tion. We still have two more doses to take.

We started training on Wednesday and Friday afternoon we were given the guns to practice with. The officers are all nice fellows. They are patient and painstaking with us and as long as they see you are trying they will treat you right. The boys are still together in the barracks except that F. E Green and Sherman Snyder were taken away because they objected to bearing arms. Several of the other boys from Garrett county are still here and some of them come in to see us every evening. There is another promotion among the Garrett county boys which I don't think has been given. Haymond Rodeheaver is now a Corporal. So as a whole the Garrett county boys are getting there.

Sincerely,
Private B. H. Wiley,
Co. G 313 Infantry,
Camp Meade, Md.

Tales of Resilius Marvel, Guardian of Bank Treasure

By WELDON J. COBB

THE ORIENTALIST

Copyright, W. G. Chapman

OUR auto had gone dead after striking a great loose paving block. The chauffeur was busying himself getting the machine into shape again. Resilius Marvel could brook necessary delay, but it was his characteristic never to sit placidly by with folded hands. He had estimated a stoppage of some continuance, had leaped from the vehicle, and asked for my company with a brief glance.

It was a quaint part of the great city, remembered by old settlers only. Once the narrow winding street, extending only two blocks, had been residential. Business had reached and swung over and fallen into the desuetude of rag warehouses and storage cellars. Some of the rickety old-fashioned structures had gone to decay and disuse. We strolled along the stone walk, cracked and irregular, while my friend descanted on the gilded past of those old tottering mansions.

It was sudden, startling, tragic—the cry, the call, the appeal that abruptly rang out upon that dull afternoon air. The near hum of business activity did not soften or dash it out. Marvel came to a sharp halt and I followed his example. Those keen eyes of his gave one comprehensive sweep of what lay opposite us. Mine followed the indication of his own, roved across the gray house fronts and rested on the third story, where every sash was boarded up or out of place.

"For the love of heaven—oh, some one come into the house!"

Those were the words, uttered in weird, thrilling accents. Time, place and the speaker, a fair young girl, harmonized with a suggestion of the intense and dramatic. She was framed vividly against the dark background of the vacant room, one hand supporting her against the rotting window frame. She wavered as though she would fall over the low reaching casement into the street. Her face was white as marble, her eyes stricken with some fearful emotion of horror or excitement. She saw us, and her cry was meant for us.

I noted Resilius Marvel incline that shrewd face of his as though striving to peer into a mystery, his keen professional instincts at once aroused. He was as a man before whom the end of a puzzle had been cast, with a challenge for expert elucidation. His features instantly assumed a certain grimness, as if he discerned menace in the situation, urgency, perchance peril.

"Come," he said simply, quickly, and started to cross the street, but a shriek, ringing, far-echoing, curdling half halted him. Together we noted a sharp turn to the episode, blotting out what had materialized so suddenly. From behind the wavering girlish form a pair of arms extended. They were sinuous, though stalwart, and full silken vestments enclosed them. They encircled the shrieking girl and drew her back, one of them muffling her face in the folds of a fleecy, billowy scarf that, with the garb of the new actor in the momentary drama, gave an oriental tinge to the situation.

There was blankness then where there had been animation. Travesty, drama or tragedy, the curtain was down and the act ended. I wondered what Marvel would do next. His sure definite leap over the cobblestones enlightened me. He reached the opposite pavement, made a rush, and as his powerful body came like a battering ram against the closed door guarding the old wreck of a rookery, it flew from its hinges like a barrier of straw.

The dull afternoon light of day penetrated a long passageway feebly, and beyond was gloom. There was a flash as we reached a shaking, uncertain stairway. My friend had brought out his portable electric tube. I followed it and himself, guided by the shifting focus point that showed splintered treads fast rotting away. We reached a landing. A frail door guarded the second flight. It was unlocked, however, and yielded to a touch. At the top of the stairway we came into a large room. It held the open window space at which the girl, now so mysteriously vanished, had appeared to our vision for the space of a few moments. As Marvel passed I saw him stoop. It was to pick up a crumpled piece of paper. Then, his eyes fixed on the floor, he traced a track in the accumulated dust of years, showing where trailing garments had made a broad plain mark.

There was an open door at the end of the long room. It led out upon a platform which spanned an alley. Leading from the platform was a rickety flight of narrow stairs. As we glanced over the railing we saw a female form just leaping from the lower step. As she turned to run down the alley towards the next street she turned slightly.

"The same girl," observed Marvel sententiously.

"Yes," I assented, noting that her hand was held closely across her chest and that she tottered as she run, evidently on the verge of collapse from nervous excitement.

I saw Marvel make a movement to dash after her. Then he saw it was too late. At the mouth of the alley stood an automobile, evidently in waiting for the girl. She fairly fell into its seat as she pulled herself up the step, the urgency with which the chauffeur acted telling that she had given him some speedy directions. The machine flitted out of view with a whisk, but not until my companion had applied a glass to his eye with the words:

"You are good at figures—remember 21342½." Then sententiously: "Our work is here, if it is really our work," and crossed the platform. A lowered door guarded the structure facing on the next street. It had an iron handle, and a mere pressure upon this sent the metal barrier on pulley chains to the ceiling. As we stepped across the grooved threshold of the door, through some delicate adjustment of weight, closed after us.

I was not given to exhibitions of surprise or unguarded utterances in the presence of the imperturbable Marvel. What we now faced, however, astounded me, and I noted plainly that he shared my emotions. It was like a step from squalor into splendor, from gaunt barrenness into the gleam of oriental grandeur. We had entered a large room heavily hung with tapestries, even to the ceiling, that must have cost a fortune. A heavy velvet carpet made our footsteps noiseless. In the center of the room was a raised dais. In front of this burned a varicolored lamp covered with the precious metals and rare and costly jewels. A globe giving out a soft girasole glow flooded the apartment with a mystic radiance, while the incense-laden air enhanced a certain dreamy effect that lulled the senses and suggested the rare inner temple of some shrine of the Indus.

The dais supported a throne, backed by a wondrous statue carved from ebony or lignumvitae, representing a goddess perfect of frame and feature. All around the room were cushions fashioned of rose silk, and before each was a prayer rug.

"A translation to the antipodes," remarked Resilius Marvel, and for all the cautious subjugation of his tone, I traced the faint echo of a scoff. "Let us explore to a practical end. This layout had no legitimate promise in the heart of an American city. It is here with a purpose—we will find out what.

With the audacity of a man not unused to penetrating where he chose when in the line of duty, my friend led the way across the apartment and pushed aside the heavy drapery at its far end. An antecorridor continued the suite. It was as elaborately furnished as the main apartment we had just traversed. No denizen of the strange place had as yet come into evidence, but as we entered a third apartment we came upon a man hastily rearranging a disordered attire.

Judging from his flustered manner and the full sleeved silken robe he wore, he was the owner of the pair of arms that we had seen thrust back the girl from the window. Then, too, at his waist the man had stuffed into his belt the fluffy veil or scarf which he had used as a gag to silence that heart-stricken cry: "Oh, some one come into this house!"

The man was dark as the ebony statue in the first room we had entered. Instantly, as the shadow of Marvel fell across his range of vision, he was erect, his arms folded, his attitude brash and challenging. My friend had kept straight on as if to pass the draperies behind this arbitrary sentinel. Before the apparent entrance to another apartment the latter sprang, his arm outstretched.

"Banal—banal!" he croaked shrilly "—no!"

"I say, yes," observer Marvel contemptuously, and he placed his hand across the arm of the man and caught at the rich hanging. The entire drapery was suddenly wrenched out of his reach, the servitor fell to hands and knees muttering some cabalistic jargon and then crept out of the way, and we saw—Nirvasa.

We did not know her then by that name; it came later; but I was awed and breathless as, like some splendid apparition, a being in the full bloom of lovely womanliness faced us. She stood near a gilt stand on which rested a crystal globe. She was peerless—in her dress purely oriental, a seeming Indian princess. Slightly dark, her face had an indescribable glow, rather that of the richest rose than delicate and clear. Her eyes were deep set, but sparkling, enthralling, inviting.

She smiled upon us, divesting her welcome of every tinge of awkwardness, her attributes of any effort to impress and mystify. One flashing glance froom those intelligent eyes seemed to envelope and consume us. And then, to my sublime astonishment she said, with steely self poise and without a shade of hesitation:

"Mr. Resilius Marvel, I am honored."

If she had not made the recognition, less speedily would my expert friend have pierced the travesty. If she knew him it was no necromatic power—she must be of the class who make it a study to know those whom they select as prey, those whom they fear as masters.

I had noticed that Marvel's comprehensive glance had swept the room keenly. His eyes were most attracted by a chart behind the gilt table. It was a complex chart with tracings of suns, moons, crescents and stars upon its surface, heiroglyphic characters and tables.

"A life chart," observed Marvel, fixing his glance now on the oracle of the place.

"A seance chamber of Mahgmat," replied the lady promptly, but dimming any boastfulness by maintaining that even, complacent smile.

"Ah, yes," remarked Marvel—"clairvoyant."

"Mystic," corrected my lady.

"You are better informed than the police, then," retorted my friend incisively.

A pretty dismay wrinkled the forehead of the woman. She made an expressive movement with her hands to express helplessness. Then those liquid eyes took to their depths a pretty, pleading power.

"It is unfortunate that you accept so much on hearsay," she said softly. "You are the final. I wish I had your good opinion. Will you let me try and gain it?—I would have no secrets from you. I am no impostor. I com from the Himalayas, the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter in verity. I profess to tell no fortunes, but some day, with time given, I may be able to show even Resilius Marvel that there is a coherency and potency to some of my claims."

My friend was silent. There was a slight curl of disbelief on his lip as the lady placed her dainty hand on the crystal globe.

"I have explored crystal reading," he said finally. "I was more fortunate than one of your clients—an old farmer who lost several thousands between here and his home."

Nirvasa shrugged her graceful shoulders and looked grieved and friendless. Then she swept aside the draperies behind her. We entered a large square room. Again — amazement.

I HAVE EXPLORED CRYSTAL READING, HE SAID FINALLY.

There was a beaten circle all around the rug covering the floor.

A man, a Hindu, lightly garbed, thin to the point of attenuation, was slowly, regularly turning somersaults. In the corner of the room seated before a blackboard was a Sepoy youth. He had a piece of chalk in his hand, and at every overturn of the wiry acrobat he would chalk a number on the board, obliterating its predecessor. There were five figures in the chronicle, and he would name them in a drowsy, sing-song way each time he wrote a record.

"Asoll Ben," explained our guide. "He is paying a penance to release the soul of a sinful father—one hundred thousand somersaults. It was to have been along the Delhi road, but he joined my party and is completing his eighty odd thousand evolution here on the path to clearing the score.

"Abou Hamed," she continued, lifting a curtain and showing a couch covered with tiger skins upon which lay curled a small dwarfed man. "He is of the highest theosophic circle—twice returned to earth.

"The oldest man in the world—Djalma."

She had proceeded like some lecturer exhibiting his menagerie. As she swept aside a final drapery the last and most remarkable disclosure greeted us.

In the center of a room resembling a laboratory was a balloon-shaped globe of glass. It was about ten feet high and broad enough to contain inside a chair, a table and a man. From several iron tanks there ran rubber pipes to this giant retort.

"The oldest man in the world," Nirvasa had said—and it seemed possible. Inside the glass globe, reclining and engrossed in a time-worn tome bound in ivory, was the strangest human being I had ever seen. His skin was like yellow parchment. His frame seemed ossified. He had hair and a beard of faded white sweeping to his waist. His hands were like claws, his face beak-like. Only his eyes were alive—they gleamed like two sparks of electric fire.

"He is Djalma Khi, the alchemist, and nearly one hundred and fifty years old," purred the tones of Nirvasa. "I have the proofs. He is the gold maker. A wonderful power, but lacking still some ingredient to make his knowledge so complete that the touch of a wand would turn clay into bright, shining bullion. To leave his native mountains and breathe this tainted air would mean death. We dare not remove him for any length of time from the artificial air generated in those tanks. I will show you."

I watched with interest as the lady tapped on a hinged section of the glass globe, opened it and spoke to the oldest man in the world. He reached out and took up a crucible, placing something within it, and handed it to Nirvasa.

"It is coal," she said, and Marvel deigned to examine and agree. The man in the globe handed out next a tiny phial. "It is distilled vapor from his sole discovery, the gold rooot of Brahmaputra," she said further. "Pour it in. Come—see."

She moved the retort across a metal plate, turned on an acetylene jet, and surrounded it all with a metal drum. There was a hissing sound. She turned off the gas, with the aid of a pair of tongs immersed the crucible in a jar of water, and poured out upon a marble slab a jagged nugget.

"Accept as a souvenir, Mr. Marvel," she said in a low, winning tone. "You will find it of superfine quality."

"Doubtless," acceded my friend dryly. "I see your plan—the genuine articles in equipment to cater to your mystery—loving clients, and I suppose, a new religious fad to sustain all the accessories? I am not interested, as I did not come as a seeker after mystic revelations. I came by an unaccustomed way—the rear, and I am here to learn the occasion of an almost tragic outburst from the young lady who was removed so suddenly by your servitor."

"Oh, yes," smiled Nirvasa, as tranquilly as if the simplest, most ordinary statement in the world had been made. "The young lady was quieted and sent home. She is one of those impressionable beings who go easily into hysterics—you had an exhibition of it."

"And something more," replied Marvin sternly—"the number of the automobile that conveyed her away from here."

I saw Nirvasa wince. For a moment her audacity was daunted. But only for a moment.

"I do not know her name," she said, "but I can help you further, Mr. Marvel. She lives at the Glendale apartments."

"Thank you," said Resilius Marvel, if surprised not showing it, and my lady led us through an intricate variety of corridors and apartments until we reached the front of the building and turned us over to a tawny-skinned servitor in costume. Still smiling, still radiantly beautiful, still unruffled, Nirvasa bowed—as from that remarkable haunt of mystery.

From the manner of the high priestess of what I considered to be a temple of chicanery, and the way in which Marvel treated the proposition, I was satisfied in my own mind that the woman Nirvasa was one of the many clairvoyants and mystics who made it a business to catch the unwary and credulous. We regained our machine without Marvel saying a word. He was silent and thoughtful until we reached the office of the United Bankers' Protective association. He waved me to a seat, went to a bookcase, selected a scrapbook, opened it at a certain page, placed the volume before me and went to the telephone.

Within five minutes I had perused several old newspaper articles telling of Nirvasa. She was a shrewd adventuress, successful amid oriental occult surroundings. She had been mixed up in several cases where her clairvoyancy had gained the confidence of clients, and she had induced them to invest in worthless stocks and bonds owned by outside confederates. The Oldest Man in the World was really a patriarchal individual, and had once been one of the living curiosities of a big traveling circus outfit. Nirvasa was a grade above the average fortune teller. She really possessed a fair clairvoyant power. At one city she had established a cult, had collected several thousands of dollars, and then with her combination had faded away.

Resilius Marvel came to me just as I had concluded my interesting reading. He held two pieces of paper in his hands. They were crumpled fragments straightened out, and I knew represented the little wad of paper I had seen him pick up at the window where we had seen the girl.

"Look that over," he said.

A new zest of interest came into the strange case. Torn crosswise, the two fragments comprised a check for $20,000, signed "Ainslee Druse," "Garnet Druse." It was drawn on our bank.

"Do you know them?" asked Marvel.

"I know the account well," I replied, lost in surprise and augury; "I know Ainslee Druse by sight. This is—fairly remarkable."

"It gives us plain sailing for a bit," declared Marvel in his businesslike way. "I have been busy at the telephone. Nirvasa told the truth; the girl we saw, or at least one answering to her description, lives at the Glendale apartments, and her name is Garnet Druse."

"That is the sister of Ainslee Druse," I volunteered. "If you will give me ten minutes I may be able to dig up something at the bank."

"Go ahead," said Marvel simply.

I came back with some real information. The Druses, brother and sister, were children of the Hon. Amos Druse, now abroad. We had carried two family accounts. One was in the name of Ainslee Druse, originally $40,000, drawn down in solid amounts through sixty days, and a last check presented two days previous, thrown out—"N. S. F."

"Not sufficient funds, eh?" translated Marvel. "And the other account?"

"Joint checks honored only on deposit of Amos Druse when bearing signature of both brother and sister."

"Good for the face of that check?"

"Yes, and four times over," I replied. "There is something queer about this affair," I submitted. "The paying teller says the withdrawal of such substantial amounts caused him to notice Ainslee Druse. He knows him slightly in a social way. Says he has been hurried, excited, dopy by turns when he came to draw money of late."

"We will go to the Glendale apartments," announced my friend abruptly.

It was only through determined persistency that Marvel was able to at last prevail upon Miss Garnet Druse, through her maid, to admit us. Everything bespoke refinement as we entered a room where sat a frail delicate girl whose face and manner bespoke wistful gentleness that appeared to both of us. Her face was pale, her bosom heaving, her eyes expressed a hunted dread. She had not yet recovered from the great strain of the episode to which we had been a witness.

"Miss Druse," spoke my friend, "I am Resilius Marvel of the United Bankers' Protective association. This gentleman," and he indicated myself, "is the private secretary of the bank upon which that check is drawn. Our mission is confidential and we ask an explanation that will be entirely helpful to you."

For a moment the fair young creature gazed at us as if her tongue was glued to the roof of her mouth and the life currents turned to ice. Then her head sank upon her arms outstretched on the table before her. She uttered two despairing, heart-rending words:

"Save us!"

I noted the humane, sympathetic face of my friend soften. He made a quick motion to me which I understood and I passed into the next room, leaving the two alone. As I stood at the windows looking out into the street I could catch the echo of the tones of Marvel—low, persuasive, almost fatherly. Finally, broken, sobbing intonations mingled, the current of words became more steady. At the end of half an hour when my friend rejoined me, I knew that master mind of his had prevailed over the shrinking, fearsome mood of the beautiful girl, stricken with the weight of some dread secret, and had conquered the clouded situation. Now it was clear as crystal.

Ainslee Druse, sanguine, lightly balanced, invested with liberal wealth for the first time in his life, had strayed to the seance chamber of the Nirvasa. Her fascination, it appeared, had less to do with his constant visits than her specious influence in making him believe that through a judicious investment he could assist The Oldest Man in the World to develop and mature his ability to manufacture gold from waste substances. Nirvasa had evidently secretly given him some subtle elixir under the guise of a rare Indian wine that had completed his subjugation. He had revelled in a fool's paradise. His sister had discovered in part his infatuation. She had followed him that day to the home of Nirvasa, to see him give the check to the woman upon which her name was forged. She had broken in upon them, seized the check, and the end of her wild flight we knew.

"Miss Druse will strive to find her brother through friends tonight and send us word tomorrow," explained Marvel. "She has begged me to allow her to make this effort, which she hopes will succeed, so that no scandal may result."

A hurry call reached me at the bank just after the directors' meeting the next morning. It was from Resilius Marvel and requested my immediate presence. I was at his office in a few minutes. I noticed in his inner office the flutter of a white handkerchief. My friend closed the door as I entered the room.

"It is Miss Druse," he said to me at once. "A new complication has arisen in the case. I hope and believe I have acted in time. I want you to go somewhere with me."

I knew where it was, after he had held a brief consultation with his visitor. It appeared that Miss Druse had come to his office less than half an hour previous in a great state of excitement and alarm. She had been unable to find her brother, and a thought had come to her mind that had driven her to come downtown early in the morning to visit the safety deposit vault where the plate, jewelry and family papers of the estate were kept. Only she and her brother held keys to the section where these valuables were. She had made an appalling discovery. Family diamonds contained in a chamois bag to the value of over $100,000, most of them formerly the property of her dead mother, were missing. Foiled in securing capital for his mad scheme of wealth, Ainslee Druse had secured the jewels. They were doubtless by this time in the possession of the conspirators.

"I have had two men acting on orders at the seance studio since last evening," reported Marvel as we spun along toward our destination. "There is my man now," he added as, reaching the front of the building we had so strangely visited the day previous, a prim, severe-faced individual came to the side of the machine.

"We have detained the lady," reported this ally of Resilius Marvel. "At midnight we saw the crowd had taken alarm and were bent on flight. You left open orders, and I acted on my best judgment."

"Very good."

"No sign of the young man you described. We were careless about the general crowd, but only one or two of them made off."

"Take me to the lady," directed Marvel.

We found Nirvasa pacing to and fro in a room off from the apartment where we had first seen Djalma. She feigned coolness and her wanton smile gleamed as we entered the apartment. Very briefly, very sternly, Marvel demanded a knowledge of the whereabouts of Ainslee Druse.

"I do not know," she averred. "His dealings have been with Djalma exclusively."

"Some valuable diamonds are missing," proceeded Marvel. "They must be restored—must; do you understand? As to your deposit in a local bank, an embargo has been placed upon that until you have accounted for the $40,000 of which you have divested in your latest dupe."

"You seem to know a good deal," said the woman, with her serpentine smile.

"I know enough to detain you at leisure for a long time," stated Marvel with sternness. "Come, I wish to see this Djalma Khi."

"It is useless."

"And why?"

"He is dead. In arranging to remove him one of the men tipped a piece of furniture against the glass globe. The supply of gas was cut off. He died within the hour.

We stepped into the next room. Nirvasa had spoken the truth. The great glass case lay in brittle ruins on the floor of the room. Two of the servitors were lifting the poor remains of The Oldest Man In The World into a long cedar box.

"I have only one request to make, Mr. Marvel," spoke the woman gravely.

"And what is that?" demanded Marvel.

"You jeer at my calling and its accessories, but at least this old man was genuine and consistent. I am Hindu enough to respect a sacred pledge, whatever charge you may bring against me, I will stand the penalty. As to the victim of an unfortunate accident, poor Djalma, I ask you to let his remains be shipped to a relative of his who is a member of a Hindu colony in the east. They will send his body back to his native land, a family responsibility they treasure and revere."

"Perhaps," said Marvel, steadily looking into the woman's eyes—"after an inquest."

Nirvasa started as if a scorpion had stung her. Dismay, disappointment, defeat were evinced in her features. She bit her lip and trembled with suppressed rage.

"Stand aside," ordered Marvel to the two servitors. He pushed them away, and I saw him grope within the cedar chest and his hands move all about the wasted body of Djalma Khi.

"I thought so," he observed quietly, drawing from under the black, silken funeral robe of The Oldest Man In The World a little chamois bag.

"When I have verified these jewels," he said to Nirvasa, "and the $40,000 and Ainslee Druse have materialized, you and your mountebank accomplices are free to seek new fields of business activity, and we are quits."

We traced Ainslee Druse to a near city, where the seance woman had sent him to get rid of him while she and her fellow birds of ill omen made a swift flitting. She bought her freedom by returning the money she had duped out of the sallow youth, who fully understood his past peril when the efforts of the subtle poison Nirvasa had given him departed and his dulled brain was cleared.

The remarkable man, the indomitable Resilius Marvel, placed his customary record of the case of The Oldest Man In The World among the secret archives of the United Bankers' Protective Association, accepted the heartfelt gratitude of Garnet Druse as the one fair element in the gruesome case, and passed on to new endeavors in his expert professional line of duty.

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Sections 132, 133, 134 and 135 of Article 72 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, title "Oysters," sub-title "Reserved Areas," so as to extend the operation of said sub-title to other localities of the State, and to vest certain powers in the Conservation Commission of Maryland with respect thereto; and to add two new sections to said Article, the same to follow Section 135 thereof, and to be known as Sections 135A and 135B, authorizing the Conservation Commission to reserve and replenish scraping areas upon certain conditions and restrictions, and also to set aside dredging area not to exceed one thousand acres for experimental work in propagation and cultivation of oysters.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Sections 132, 133, 134 and 135 of Article 72 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, title "Oysters," sub-title "Reserved Areas," be and the same are hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments so as to read as follows:

132. The Conservation Commission of Maryland is hereby authorized to select and reserve for oyster conservation, as provided in this sub-title, any portion or portions of the natural beds, bars and rocks of the Chesapeake Bay in dredger's area to be replenished by transplanting of small oysters, shells or other cultch, or in other feasible manner which the Commission may deem best. The Commission shall give notice of said reservation by advertisement to be inserted once a week for three successive weeks, in a newspaper published in Baltimore City, and in the county where the reserved area is located, which advertisement shall describe the area reserved and give the date on which the reservation takes effect, and shall warn all persons not to catch or disturb oysters upon such reserved area until further notice from the Commission re-opening same for public use. Whenever in the discretion of the Commission such reserved area shall have been replenished, but in no event later than three years after the beginning of such reservation it shall fix a date for re-opening same to the public, and shall give notice thereof by proper advertisement inserted as above provided. Any person who shall catch or disturb any oysters upon such reserved areas between the date such reservation begins and the date fixed by the Commission for re-opening same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for not less than three months, nor more than one year, in the discretion of the Court.

133. Any resident of the State eligible to hold a dredger's or scraper's license may make application to the Conservation Commission at its office in Baltimore for a permit to catch and remove seed oysters, at any time between March 15th and May 15th, or between September 15th and November 1st, in each year, from any bottoms not leased of the Chesapeake Bay or tributaries in dredger's territory where an abundance of small oysters may occur which in the opinion of the Commission would secure better results by being transplanted. The Commission may issue such permit, and shall describe therein the particular portion of said bottoms from which seed oysters are to be taken, and shall fix the manner and the time for catching same. The person holding such permit shall transport all seed oysters caught by him directly to such reserved areas within the limits prescribed in Section 132, as may be designated by the Commission, and there transplant same in the presence of a deputy commander of the State Fishery Force, whose duty it shall be to see that such seed oysters are transplanted in a proper manner and upon the designated areas. The deputy commander shall thereupon issue a certificate to the person so transplanting seed oysters, which shall state as accurately as possible the number of bushels transplanted, and shall be serially numbered and substantially in the form following:

.....19....

I hereby certify that Captain..... of the vessel.....has this day transplanted upon reserved area located at ..... a cargo of seed oysters estimated to contain.....bushels.

.....
Deputy Commander.

A duplicate of each certificate so issued shall be forwarded by the deputy commander to the Comptroller of the State Treasury. The expense of catching, removing and transplanting such seed oysters as herein authorized shall be borne by the person to whom such permit and certificate shall have been issued, provided, however, that such expense, to be determined by the Commission but not to exceed ten cents per bushel, shall be reimbursed to him, or his assigns, by the Comptroller, upon the preservation and surrender of his certificate, out of the "Conservation Fund," provided for by Section 135. The commander may act for any deputy commander in the performance of the duties above mentioned.

134. From and after the date designated by the Commission for re-opening of such reserved areas, until the closing of the dredging season then current, oysters shall be caught upon such reserved areas only by dredgers, scrapers or tongers of the State holding licenses for the current season, in the manner now prescribed by law, and subject also to the following special conditions and restrictions, viz:

(1) Oysters caught upon reserved areas shall be subject to a special charge or tax to be fixed by the Commission and to be announced in the advertisement reopening such area or areas, said charge or tax to be not less than five cents per bushel, nor more than ten cents per bushel, which tax shall be collected by the buyers at the place where said oysters are to be no further shipped in bulk in vessels, and shall be paid weekly to the Comptroller or his agent by the buyers, such tax to be in addition to any other charge on oysters now or hereafter imposed by law, and payment thereof to be enforced in the same manner as the inspection tax provided for by Section 70 of said Article 72. The deputy commander shall sign in triplicate certificates serially numbered and substantially in the form following:

.....19....

I hereby certify that the cargo of oysters loaded by Captain.....of the vessel.....was taken from reserved areas and is subject to a tax of.....cents per bushel, which is to be paid to the Comptroller or his agent.

.....
Deputy Commander.

The copies of each certificate so issued shall be given the captain of the vessel in which oysters are to be transported from such reserved areas, one of which shall be retained and the other shall be delivered to the ultimate buyer of said oysters as hereinbefore stated. The third copy shall be forwarded by the deputy commander to the office of the Commission.

(2) Oysters caught upon reserved areas shall not be removed therefrom until the deputy commander in charge thereof shall have issued said certificates, as above provided.

(3) Said oysters shall be inspected and measured at the place of sale where the oysters are to be no further shipped in bulk in vessels, and before unloading the captain of each vessel shall exhibit and deliver to the buyer one of the certificates furnished by the deputy commander, showing that such cargo of oysters is subject to the special charge or tax. Such oysters shall be unloaded only in the presence of an inspector, whose duty it shall be to inspect, measure and report upon such oysters in the same manner as upon other oysters caught and sold in this State.

(4) Oysters caught upon reserved areas shall not be shipped out of the State of Maryland until the special charge or tax shall have been paid.

(5) Oysters caught upon reserved areas shall be culled in accordance with the existing law relating to culling, and the under-sized oysters shall be returned to the natural bars from which they were taken.

(6) Before any oysters are caught upon such reserved areas, the captain of each vessel shall take out a special license from the Commission, at a cost of one dollar per vessel, such license to be issued only after the captain of such vessel has taken an oath before a member of said Comimssion, or their agent, that he will not remove oysters caught upon such reserved areas until the deputy commander's certificate in the form above provided, has been issued to him, that he will faithfully comply with all provisions of law regulating the catching of oysters upon reserved areas, and that he will pay, or cause to be paid, the special charge or tax upon all such oysters so caught by him.

Catching oysters upon such reserved areas shall continue subject to the foregoing conditions and restrictions during the remainder of the oyster season current at the time the Commission re-opens same, as above provided. Thereafter the said areas shall be thrown open to public use in the same manner as other natural beds and bars are now used, unless the said areas are again set aside for replenishing, in accordance with the provisions of this sub-title. Any person who shall catch oysters upon such reserved areas contrary to the provisions, conditions and restrictions of this Section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for not less than three months, nor more than one year, in the discretion of the Court.

135. The Comptroller of the State Treasury shall pass the amount of the special charge or tax, provided for by this sub-title, to the credit of the "Conservation Fund." This fund shall be drawn upon for reimbursing to persons holding the deputy commander's certificates, the expense of catching, removing and transplanting seed oysters, to be determined by the Commission but not to exceed ten cents per bushel; and any excess of said tax thereafter remaining may be used for purchasing oyster shells or other cultch or obtaining other seed oysters, to be transplanted upon such areas as may be hereafter set apart for that purpose.

135B. The Conservation Commission is authorized to select and reserve for experiments in oyster conservation and propagation, any portion or portions of the natural beds, bars and rocks of the Chesapeake Bay or tributaries in dredging area not to exceed in the aggregate one thousand acres, and to give notice thereof in the manner stated in Section 132, and to transplant thereon seed oysters, shells, or other cultch, or to propagate seed oysters, or in any other feasible manner to develop methods of production of oysters, and said Commission shall be empowered to improve, replenish or cultivate said experimental areas in such manner and for such length of time as it may determine. The Commission shall have power to dispose of the oysters at any time, and manner, and upon any terms which it may fix, the proceeds thereof to be placed to the credit of the "Conservation Fund," and to be used for further experimental work upon said areas or some other purpose to be determined by the Commission. Any person catching oysters upon such experimental area without permission from the Commission shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to the penalties prescribed in Section 132.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That this Act is hereby declared to be an emergency law and necessary for the immediate preservation of the public safety, and being passed upon by a yea and nay vote supported by three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses of the General Assembly, the same shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved June 27, 1917.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That all civil causes or proceedings, whether at law or in equity, which may be pending at the time this Act takes effect, or which may hereafter be instituted during the continuance of the present war, by or against any person in the National Guard or Naval Militia or in the Maryland State Guard while on active service in the military or naval service of the United States, shall be suspended, stayed, upon the application of [illegible] or his representative or attorney, provided:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That nine new sections be added and the same are added to Article 43 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, title "Health," sub-title "Nuisances," the same to follow immediately after Section 106 of said Article, to be known as Sections 106A, 106B, 106C, 106D, 106E, 106F, 106G, 106H, and 106I, and to read as follows:

KENDALL LUMBER CO.

One of Western Maryland's Largest Industries.

In a special industrial edition, profusely illustrated issued by the Meyersdale Republican last week, the following relative to one of Western Maryland's largest industries, appeared:

For a quarter of a century the name Kendall has been intimately associated with the timber, logging and lumber interests of Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, the Carolinas, and practically all of the territory east of Chicago.

Commencing in a small way the business of the company has grown steadily until today it embraces extensive holdings in Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and other states.

At the present time the company is actively engaged at its mill in Donora, South Carolina, from which it makes large shipments of the famous Southern yellow pine and other timber to many Northern and even Canadian points.

A mill formerly operated at Kendall, Md., and another at Ohiopyle, Pa., have been dismantled, the timber in those sections all have been cut some years ago. The company's largest operations at present are at Crellin, Maryland, where in 1905, it brought all the timber holdings, property and mill of the Preston Lumber and Coal Company, an Oakland, Maryland, concern that had been successfully operating in that district for ten years prior to disposing of its holdings to the Kendall Lumber Company.

This one property consists of a 40-mile standard gauge railroad known as the Preston Railroad, and which the company has pushed forward from time to time to keep pace with its logging operations. It connects with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad's main line at Hutton, Md., a point about three miles distant from the company's sawmill and mill town of Crellin. The rolling stock and equipment of the road are designed to meet all the requirements of the logging operations and coal industry located along the line, and it is of substantial construction and standard gauge.

Some idea of the extent of the company's holdings may be gained from knowledge of the fact that, although the mill has been in operation for almost a quarter of a century, with a daily capacity of 90,000 feet of lumber on a 10-hour run, there still remains enough timber to keep the mill in operation until 1925. The timber consists of hardwoods almost exclusively, oak, hickory, maple and beech predominating, with a fair quantity of hemlock, poplar and basswood, each variety having its particular uses to which it is adapted almost exclusively.

The location of the mill at the confluence of Snowy Creek with the Youghioghney River is most advantageous for the company's operations, and the railroad logging switch runs directly to a dam in the Youghiogheny, in which the logs are impounded until hauled to the saws by an endless chain operated by steam power. The mill has a daily capacity of 90,000 feet of lumber, and operates an 8 foot 14-inch band saw for one carriage and a 72-inch circular saw for the other carriage. The carriages can handle a 36-foot log and are so constructed that the crews can change operations from a circular saw to a band saw in 5 minutes if the occasion requires, although usually the saws are both in constant operation.

The mill proper covers an area of 150x60 feet and is two stories in height, with power plant and boiler room nearby, and a filing room for both band and circular saws located conveniently to both saws. The filing rooms, like the balance of the equipment are up to date in every particular, the filing machines being operated by steam power with their individual engines.

The boiler room is equipped with three upright boilers of improved type, while in the engine room is installed a 400-h.p. John D. Newell engine for operating the planer in case the mill should be shut down and an engine for operating the dynamo, the company having installed its own electric plant for lighting the mill and the town. In equipment the mill embraces all of the most approved mechanical appliances known to the mill trade. Live rolls, worm rolls and endless chains which operate with almost human skill and intelligence, reduce the manual labor incidental to operating to a minimum.

From the gigantic saws the live rolls carry the lumber to a modern Allis-Chalmers edger, the rough slabs being switched to a "hog" machine that grinds them into saw dust, which furnishes fuel for the boilers. Nearby is a lath machine that turns out 25,000 lath daily, while installed close by another machine known as a squarer turns out pieces 2x2 for balusters, stair rods etc. With lumber bringing the present prices, nothing is allowed to go to waste in a modern mill, and the Kendall plant has a slab resaw installed, an ingenious machine that takes scrap lumber and transforms it into boards suitable for doors for coke cars. This lumber otherwise would be wasted.

Going back to the "main line," as it were, to where the lumber from the saws has journeyed to the edger, it is again taken by the live rolls, which keep it in constant motion, and passed on to the trimmer, which automatically cuts the boards into even lengths, worm rolls twisting the boards off to this section of the mill, while the heavy pieces go to their proper destination on the docks preparatory to shipping. The trackage, docks and sidings are all so constructed as to reduce the handling of the finished product to a minimum of expense for labor, modern machinery having been installed in every place where it can operate to advantage.

The company maintains a large dry kiln, about 35 x 90 feet in dimensions, into which all chestnut lumber is placed before shipping, most of this lumber being contracted for by the big automobile manufacturing companies who demand that it be kiln-dried before shipping. In the yards the company carries from three to four million feet of lumber constantly on hand, and is thereby prepared to fill orders for standard sizes with the least possible delay.

Facilities are at hand for the filling of orders for planed lumber, a planer and resaw having been installed on the ground floor of the mill, which is reached directly by a siding from the yards here lumber of any dimensions is cut to order.

The company ships an average of from 12 to 15 cars of lumber daily, shipments reaching all points east of Chicago. A large business is done in supplying railroad ties, mine ties and timbers and other heavy timbers for bridge work, etc. The basswood goes largely into the manufacture of cigar boxes, the chestnut into automobiles and the maple and poplar into furniture.

With completely equipped car shop, machine shop and blacksmith shop, this old-established lumber company is prepared to, and does, manufacture most of its logging cars and repairs its engines and rolling stock.

To conduct successfully the operations of this plant requires the service of a small army of employees and last month the company's payroll carried 600 men. About 50 men are employed at the Crellin mill; 30 train hands are carried, and from 350 to 400 men comprise the logging crew.

The company's mill town of Crellin, is well laid out and provided with school, church and store, while a good road to Oakland, Md., but 4 miles distant, makes it easily accessible. The State of Maryland has recently decided to extend its splendid road system from Oakland through Crellin to the West Virginia state line near Terra Alta.

The management and responsibilities of the mill and logging camp devolve upon Charles Ream, the General Superintendent, and he is an executive who possesses the happy faculty of surrounding himself with capable assistants, to the end that operations at the plant move off smoothly, even in these times of scarcity of labor. Mr. Ream has filled this position for many years and has ably demonstrated his fitness for it.

The Kendall Lumber Company maintains general offices in the Oliver Building, Pittsburgh, the officers being J. L. Kendall, of Pittsburgh, president; S. A. Kendall, of Meyersdale, vice-president; Frank Cunningham, general manager of all the plants, and W. F. Shatz, treasurer.

The officers of the company are progressive, energetic men of affairs who have contributed in no small measure to the growth of Pennsylvania's lumber interests and the development of its resources, through their enterprise and foresight.

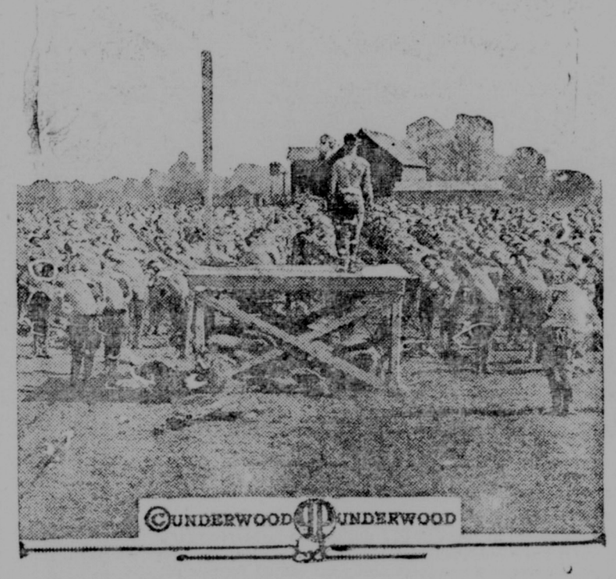
"Setting Up" Exercises in Open Prepare National Army Men For Rigors of War



When it comes to physical fitness, soldiers of the new National Army will be well equipped when they get "over there," for they are being trained with a single eye to making rugged men of them all. Here they are at exercise at Camp Dix, one of the great cantonments. One glance at the men stripped to they will be able to "hold their own" against any soldiers now in the European war.

Opportunities for Education at Washington.

To the young man or woman who seeks to obtain a college degree and a livelihood at the same time, no city in the country offers an opportunity more attractive than that to be found in the national capital. The several universities at Washington provide evening classes with hours arranged conveniently for Government employes, who ordinarily complete their day's work at half past four and all libraries, including the Library of Congress, are open at night.

For years thousand of young people have entered the civil service at Washington with the main idea of devoting three or four years to equiping themselves for a professional or scientific career while supporting themselves. Many of the young men live at fraternity houses, cooperatively conducted thereby lessening the living expense and also securing a place where they can entertain their friends.

In addition to the university courses, the Young Men's Christian Association and private schools conduct evening classes in technics, languages, accountancy, stenography and typewriting, and the usual high school studies.

Notwithstanding the drafts for military service, practically all schools in Washington show an increased enrollment this year. This is due to the great influx incident to the war. Ten or twelve thousand new clerks and other employes have been appointed in the departments and this great civilian army is being added to daily. Stenographers, typewriters and mechanical draftsmen for the service generally, and what are known as schedule clerks, index and catalogue clerks, clerks qualified in statistics or accounting, and clerks qualified in business administration for the office of the Ordnance Department of the Army are in demand.

The representative of the Federal civil service commission at the post offices in all cities are receiving numerous inquiries from persons who wish to be at the seat of government at this time of big events and to have a part in the actual administration of the Government's great business. Women are finding in this office work an opportunity to "do their bit" in a very practical way.

AUTO BURNS

Car Owned by Mr. W. G. Hinebaugh a Total Loss.

Last Tuesday evening the Saxon automobile, owned and being driven by Mr. W. G. Hinebaugh, of Oakland, was entirely consumed at a point on the State road near the old Dunkard church on Casey's hill north of Accident.

Mr. Hinebaugh was driving the car north on the road when the motor ceased to operate and upon making an investigation soon discovered that the car was on fire. He left the machine after running it into the embankment alongside the road where it continued to burn until nothing was left but the framework.

He carried an insurance of $600 on the car with the Fred. A. Thayer agency in Oakland.

CRYSTAL WEDDING.

That of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph J. Glotfelty Celebrated.

Many of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Glotfelty assembled at their home near Oakland last Friday evening, the occasion being the twentieth anniversary of their wedding. Many beautiful gifts of china were presented the host and hostess, each of them being accompanied by congratulations and best wishes.

The evening was spent in a general social way, supper being served to the guests assembled. Towards midnight six automobile loads of young men from Oakland near by, who, it may be assumed, had not been invited nor were expected, lit upon the lawn surrounding the home, and gave vent to their expression of good will by a regular old time serenade, old saws, tin pans, and other noisy instruments being employed. After the serenaders had been treated right and were given the glimpse of the "bride and groom" they departed peaceably, followed by the guests of the evening, who arrived home in the small hours of the morning.

Two of the bridemaids who were at the wedding twenty years ago, Mrs. Jennie Shultz and Mrs. A. W. Helbig, were preseut. The following is an account of the wedding as published twenty years ago; in the Garrett Journal:

"The home of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Browning, of near Oakland, was the scene of a very beautiful wedding on Tuesday. The event was the marriage of their daughter, Miss Carrie, to Mr. J. T. Glotfelty, of Montana, formerly of Oakland. The ceremony was performed at noon by the Rev. J. M. Davis, of this place, in the presence of about one hundred relatives and friends. The bridesmaids were Misses Bell, Nellie and Jennie Browning, of Oakland, the groomsman, Mr. Wm. Glotfelty, of Accident, a cousin of the groom. The bride was attired in a handsome costume of white silk and chiffon, with chiffon ribbon and pearl trimmings, white gloves and slippers, and carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses. The groom wore a Prince Albert suit of broadcloth relieved by a buttonaire of rosebuds. The bridesmaids were respectively [illegible] over [illegible] and green with ribbon [illegible] match, and white slippers and carried bouquets of pink, yellow and red roses respectively. The groomsman wore the conventional black with a buttonaire of rosebuds. (Mr. and Mrs. Glotfelty wore their wedding costumes Friday evening.) The bridal march, "Lohengrin," was played by Dr. J. G. Robinson, one of Oakland's most accomplished musicians. After the ceremony the guests repaired to the dining room where a bountiful dinner was served, consisting of all the good things of the season. After dinner the bridal party departed for Oakland and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. J. Newman, until 4:42, when Mr. and Mrs. Glotfelty departed for Eastern cities.

"Many useful and valuable presents were left with congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Glotfelty. The parlor was beautifully decorated with evergreen ferns. Among the many presents was a rug presented by the groom, made of nine gray wolf hides killed and tanned by him. The Journal extends congratulations. May the happy pair have a life of unalloyed domestic felicity. After an extended wedding trip the happy couple will return here and make this their future home."

On Saturday the following day, the bride of twenty years ago, and son, Joseph, Jr., accompanied by Mrs. J. H. Riley, Mrs. H. N. Fredlock and daughter, and Mrs. P. L. Dye, and son, motored to Thayerville, to the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Browning, where they partook of an infare dinner prepared by Mrs. T. J. Browning and daughter, Miss Maude, which was greatly enjoyed by the party. After dinner they were highly entertained with music by the Browning Brothers.

The following were present:

Mrs. J. H. Riley, Mrs. P. L. Dye, Mrs. H. N. Fredlock, Mrs. W. C. Hanway, Elkins, W. Va.; Mrs. P. J. Garrett and son, Mr. and Mrs. Abel DeWitt, Deer Park; Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Echard, Mt. THE RED TRIANGLE IN FOREIGN CAMPS

Keeping Pace With U. S. Army Organization in France.

Great as is the work of the Y. M. C. A among the troops in training in this country, it is with the American Expeditionary Forces in France that the Red Triangle symbol takes on new meaning and significance. The lot of the American soldier or sailor "over there" is that of a stranger in a strange land. He is confronted and often confused by a strange language, strange customs, strange money, strange people, and strange mental, moral, and economic standards. He is just as strange to the good French people among whom he finds himself. The mutual strangeness engenders petty misunderstandings. These, of course, are but temporary and will soon clear away, but meantime the American Sammies and Jackies need a friend. That friend is the American Y. M. C. A. It is the steadying influence. It is at work day in and day out, almost night in and night out, a superb agency of service, helping the men in the American forces to find themselves, to become acclimated, to keep a grip on themselves; providing them with amusement, creature comforts, religious services, recreation, banking and eating facilities—the whole long and comprehensive program of Y. M. C. A. ministry.

In France to a greater degree even than in this country the Y. M. C. A. is a potent, ever-present, ever-active rationalizing factor in the lives of the men with the colors. Much of the story of what the Association is doing over there, of course, never passes the censor. Here and there, however, the veil is lifted, and those back home are permitted a glimpse, an inkling of the things that are going on behind the screen of necessary secrecy. From newspaper dispatches, from guarded stories brought by word of mouth by Association workers and enlisted men returning to this country, and from the always copiously censored official reports sent by Y. M. C. A. workers abroad to the New York headquarters come fragments of the story of Association work which, placed together, make an absorbing tale of accomplishment under tremendous difficulties, especially in the early days when men, money, equipment, transportation facilities and other essentials were scarcely adequate.

Now, however, the Y. M. C. A. is fairly keeping pace with the Army in its overseas mobilization. It is serving American enlisted men at the American base ports in France, at the debarkation camps near by, at the base camps farther inland, and in the villages where Americans are billeted. The sailor finds the familiar sign of the Red Triangle at every naval base from which the submarine patrols operate, and lately the Naval authorities have gone so far as to take Y. M. C. A. secretaries along to provide many of the "Y" facilities on board for men on cruise. Y. M. C. A. restaurant and cafeteies are in operation in sevaral French cities and afford the soldiers and sailors often the only eating places free from influences that are unwholesome. In Paris a number of hotels have been taken over by the Y. M. C. A. and at these men in uniform are all but compelled to stay while in the French capital. Two well-known tourist hostelries in the French Alps are now operated by the Y. M. C. A. and are designed to attract American soldiers and officers on leave.

It is a welcome sign, the American Red Triangle at the French port where the American forces debark. The trip across the Atlantic has been long and nerve-wrecking. Quarters aboard ship are cramped, and the sports ashore that are soon in full swing under Y. M. C. A. athletic directors bring welcome relaxation to stiff muscles. At this large camp ten to twenty Y. M. C. A. secretaries are on duty. In the "Y" buildings and tents [writing paper and envelopes for letters home are in immediate demand. Another great service the Y. M. C. A. performs in exchanging French money for American. Thousands of dollars daily are frequently exchanged in a single center.

At the debarkation port the Y. M. C. A. maintains a first-class American restaurant. There at as reasonable prices as possible the troops can enjoy a real American meal. Mrs. Vincent Astor is keenly interested in this work, and one of the first men she served after the restraurant was opened was a soldier who a few short months ago served her as a steward on her private yacht. The interesting reversal of roles was eloquent of the peculiar twists and turns in the fortunes of war.

At the base camps inland and at the American Expeditonary Headquarters, too, the Red Triangle is at work, providing the home touch, the religious atmosphere, the means of recreation and amusement, and by every means possible taking the curse of monotony off the soldiers' leisure hours and furnishing the antidote for the all-work-and-no-play danger. Buildings somewhat similar to the standard service building in use in the camps and cantonments in this country are being erected at these oversea camps as fast as transportation facilities will permit. Meantime at points where buildings are not yet completed tents are in use. In these movies, lectures, addresses on various subjects, including informative one as to our reasons for being in the war, "stunt" nights in which "local" soldier talent is exclusively used and which are most popular, songs and concerts and the like are nightly attractions. The Y. M. C. A. is exerting every effort to keep going all the time things that compete successfully with the crap and poker game, the wine shop, and the other influences that degrade—or at best are far from uplifting.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Beckman and Wolfe have purchased a trrct of timber near the Park and are preparing to put in a saw mill at once. They will give special attention to mine supplies, and expect to furnish at least one hundred cars of this material alone.

Eugene Commerford and family will pass the winter in Oakland, having rented apartments in the Goss building.

The U. B. and M. E. special services which have continued for several weeks at Glade Valley closed last night.

Large quantics of hay and straw will be shipped from this station. Several car loads went out in the past two weeks at good prices.

We would advise all having potatoes for sale to dispose of them at once, as the price is going down all over the country on account of the immense crop produced this season.

Gay W. Hayden went to Baltimore last Saturday where he has a good position.

Dr. A. F. Kimmell, chiropractor, is negotiating for the purchase of the Streib cottage, better known as the Baumgardner cottage. Should he get the property he will occupy it with his family immediately.

Mr. Henry Speicher, of Accident, was a Park visitor Monday.

George Dawson has finished painting the Burns cottage, and Wm. White the Talson cottage, on E street.

The State road is completed to the post office building and is open to the public. For a few days last week several of our leading citizens had a mind to work and do their bit toward completing the road, accordingly Preacher Johnson, House of Delegate White, Postmaster Rathbun, Painter Ford, Telegraph operator Ready, Contractor Winchell, Barber Moore, Clerk Harvey and others under the leadership of Bert Leighton and Jake Echard with their road men got busy and by Thursday night the subgrading and bottom rock were completed. The road will not be built any further this fall.

Did you ever see so much smoke as prevailed over the Park last week? Men, women and children were busy burning leaves. There was a general movement along this line. It was a busy time. The auditorium grounds were burned over and the gutters along many of the streets burned out. It was a death blow to mosquitos.

Thursday evening some one set fire to the woods close to the residence of Thomas Callis. Before help could be gathered the fire made such headway that two houses were in danger of being consumed. As it was a small building was burned to ashes. A suitable reward will be paid for any information which will lead to the arrest and conviction of the party who set the leaves on fire.

Sunday evening at 7 o'clock Mrs. Mary A. Hamill, passed from this life into the "world beyond." She was a saint of the sweetest character. To know her was to love her. To meet her was a pleasure. In her church life she was an inspiration. She possessed a cheerful disposition. Her life was a blessing to those who lived in her neighborhood. She will be greatly missed in the home circle, in the church and by the neighborhood.

Merchant Wolfe has been on the sick list for the past several days. He was confined to his room most of the time.

Mine Host Dunnington, of the Mountain Lake Hotel, leaves today on an extended trip west.

Some of our housekeepers experimented in buying chipped beef, corned beef and veal cutlets in the Baltimore department stores. The meats were received by parcel post.

Contractor Winchel has the contract to build the fence along the State road through the glade.

Costella Woods has gone to Shellmar to spend the winter. He has work as a carpenter at 50 cents per hour. Clate Slabaugh and Dan Sweitzer are at Dobbin looking after work in the coal mine. High prices are calling our men to many points where labor is in demand.

B. C. Harmison came over from Romney, W. Va., and spent Friday and Saturday here. He and his wife are wintering in Romney.

Mark Moon, of near Gormania, was here Tuesday hunting a house for his family this winter. Mark contemplates spending the winter at Pittsburgh working as a carpenter.

James Frame motored from Fairmont to the Park one day last week.

The farmers hereabouts are using every week day putting their farms in shape for next season's crop. Some few of them are through with their fall plowing.

MARYLAND FALLING OFF

In Her Navy Enlistments, According to Lieut. Leahy.

Maryland is again falling short of the mark in Navy enlistments.

The State that led all the others in the Union when the President sent out his first call for volunteers early last spring is not maintaining its record.

Lieutenant Commander John Grady, Recruiting Inspector for the Eastern Naval Division, is disappointed, and Lieutenant M. A. Leahy, Recruiting Officer of the Maryland District, is unable to ascribe the reason for the slump.

No effort has been spared to put the advantages of the Navy before the young men of the State, and it is hoped that November will show a decisive increase for the district.

Lieutenant Leahy believes there is yet plenty of available material in the State from which to draw.

The Bureau of Navigation is especially anxious to enlist apprentice seamen, machinists and electricians, as well as men in all the other ratings. Cooks and mess attendants are also wanted.

The Navy Department is authorizing promotions in the enlisted personnel every day and the same opportunities prevail that were in vogue when enlistments were plentiful.

Full particulars of Navy enlistments can be obtained from the nearest postmaster; directly from the Navy Recruiting Station, Calvert and Lexington, Streets, Baltimore, or from the Navy Recruiting Substations at Cumberland and Hagerstown.

In his new rank as Chief of the General Staff of the United States Army, General Trasker H. Bliss wears the new insignia of four stars on the shoulders, a departure from the old form of two stars with the eagle in the center. This new photograph of the Chief of Staff shows him in his new uniform with the new shoulder straps. It is the latest picture of Gen. Bliss, who succeeded Gen. Scott as head of the American army at National Headquarters in Washington. Gen. Scott has become the representative of the Army with the fighting forces in Europe.

VICTROLA FUND TO RED CROSS

Money Collected By The Republican Transferred to Local Chapter

It will be remembered by our readers that shortly after the first contingent of selected men arrived at Camp Meade several of them joined in a letter to this paper requesting that funds be raised to purchase a Victrola for the barracks in which they were quartered. Later another letter was received stating that the majority of them were being moved to Camp Gordon and to hold the fund intact until advised where to ship the instrument. The Garrett countians have been attached to various commands in the Southern cantonment until there is hardly a regiment in the entire camp with more than two or three of the home boys as comrades.

The Red Cross Society being in need of funds with which to purchase yarns, etc., for the Christmas boxes to be sent the soldiers, it has been deemed wise by many of the contributors to the fund to turn the entire amount over to this society to be used expressely for the purchase of yarns for knitting socks for the men. Acting upon the suggestion The Republican has placed in the hands of Mrs. J. C. Renninger, treasurer of the Red Cross, a check for $83, which represents the amount collected. Several subscriptions were made which are yet uncollected, which, when paid, will be turned over to the Society for the purposes above set forth.

CRELLIN GOES OVER TOP FOR Y

Lumbering Town Contributed Nearly $500 to Fund.

Crellin is hard to beat—in fact it is a question if it can be beat when it comes down to patriotism touching men and money.

The little town, as everyone knows, is purely a lumbering centre where the vast mills of the Kendall Lumber Company are located. It has furnished a large number of soldiers for the War. It probably has the largest membership of any branch of the Red Cross Society in the county, and now it claims, and justly, no doubt, the honor of being at the top in its contributions for the Y. M. C. A. War Fund, population considered.

The list printed herewith contains the names of nearly every resident of the place. Every one of them contributed something to this fund, totalling $431.25, and The Republican is proud to give the list space in its columns:

GOVERNMENT SEEDS

Curtailment of Annual Distribution By Congressman Zihlman.

Members of Congress have been advised that owing to the light yields and low deliveries of certain vegetable seeds grown on a contract for the Government this season, and the scarcity and high price of the seed found necessary to supplement the deliveries under these growing contracts, the Department of Agriculture has been compelled to reduce the allotment of vegetable seed below that maintained for the past three years.

Congressman Frederick N. Zihlman, of the Sixth Maryland District, is anxious to place the limited apportionment in the hands of persons who will make the best use of them, as it is expected that the War gardens will greatly add to the supply of food during the coming year, and he will send a package of seed to each person from his District making requests for same as long as the supply lasts.

Fire This Morning.

Fire was discovered in the attic of the Harry Davis home in Oakland this morning, caused probably by a defective flue. It was extinguished before the arrival of the hose reel and other apparatus. The damage was slight.

A KANSAS OIL FIELD

The General Manager Is a Former Garrett Countain.

To the Editor of The Republican.

In my last letter I said I would give a description of the Eldorado oil fields in my next letter, which I will now try to do, but before doing this I want to say a little more about Oklahoma.

I have discovered that Oklahoma is very much like Garrett county, Maryland especially the region around Oakland, except that it is on a larger scale. The low level prairies are very similar to the land around Weber's and Pleasant Valley only much more extensive. The high prairie is much the same as the land around Sunny Side on the hills between Oakland and Mt. Lake Park. The hills, and there is plenty of them, are like the hills east of Oakland, not being quite so high and equally as rockey or more so. The trees on these hills are much smaller than our trees, the cattle much larger. The roads are deep dust trails, the bed being dust and sand dug out so much with hauling that they are difficult to get over. They have very poor roads outside the towns and cities.

The country is very dry; the grass dark brown, water very scarce, all of which seems to be one of the characteristic of the country. In talking with an old settler about the dry weather a few days ago, he told me the following story as a true one, you may judge for yourself as to its merits.

"Many years ago two brothers came to Oklahoma to make their fortune in the cattle business, and the first year happened to be dry and hot and dusty. Their little crops were failures; many of their cattle died; their money was gone; their supply of food was almost exhausted and it was decided that one brother was to stay and look after this small property while the other was to go east for money and food, so he started without money, but with plenty of nerve and a small bit of flour in a sack. After he had devoured the flour, and just before he came to the railroad, he came across the bones of a man, possibly an Indian. These bones he put in his floursack and carried them on to the railroad. When he got on the train the conductor demanded his fare east. He burst into tears and said, I have no ticket, neither have I money, my brother and I came out here together. He died and requested that I take him home in the east, to burry him. The conductor demanded that he be shown the body, where upon the cattle man emptied his flour sack on the car floor. With a chokeing voice the conductor said: "you shall go as far as this road goes." It is said these men are very wealthy cattle dealers today, and if this story is true they had the nerve. But I am forgetting Eldorado, the great oil town of the West.

Eldorado is the county seat of Butten county, Kansas., and is the second county north of the Oklahoma line. From Eldorado, south and a little west, is the great Eldorado oil field, which has been in operation for two years and up until this past summer they had found no real large wells although there had been drilled several thousand wells of various capacities up to two or three hundred barrels.

The following is the story told of the great Trap Shooter Well. A party had drilled a well near the trap shooters shooting ground, which was dry in the known sands. He then sold the well to the party of sports who owned and opperated the clay pigeon game. They all being game kept on drilling with the result that a few months ago they struck the sand that was about 3000 feet deep. The well began to flow at the rate of from 20,000 to 25,000 barrels per day. Since that time the Empire Oil Co., has bought in two wells each of which are making above 15,000 barrels per day. The manager of the Trap Shooters company is Geo. L Kimmell, formerly of near Oakland, and his wife was Miss Marie Grusendorf, who is also a Garrett county girl and whose parents now live at Edgewood near Hutton. The position held by Mr. Kimmell is one of the very best positions in the Kansas oil field, as his company has now taken over other properties until they have a combination of properties representing a $30,000,000 corporation.

The large wells are found in low droves in the structure of the oil bearing formation, the domes being lower than the water around them and th water collected in the top of these domes when tapped is forced out by the presure at a wonderful rate.

However all these domes do not contain oil. Some may be too low and contain water. In others the sand may be too hard and fine to contain th oil, and after the geologist has made a thorough study of the matter there are many things which he can not tell. An old driller once said in talking to a geologist: "Any one familiar in a community can tell where Jones lives but he can't tell whether Jones is at home except by going over to see. I'm the fellow that goes down to see."

Yours very truly,
J. B. CHEUVRONT.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

The Security of the Christian.

Speaking of this security in my last I referred to the power of God which is in reality pledged to secure this end. This power was singularly manifested in the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. He was exalted above all principalities and powers. His glorified body passed to the eternal throne. By this act He has raised us in Him and the power which bore Jesus from the grave to the throne, is extended towards the weakest believer, to lift him to the resurrection being. Surely such a power is adequate for our direct necessities.

We have an illustration of this keeping power in the life of Jesus. The prince of this world measured strength with the Son of God, in mortal conflict but was defeated. His legions were expelled from haunted lives. His head was bruised. His effort to hold the body of the Saviour in the tomb was defeated as easily as when a man brushes a cobweb from his path. This, Jesus waits to do for us in the power of the Holy Spirit.

He keeps his saints by imparting grace and strength according to our need. "As thy day is, so shall thy strength be." No matter how great the need, the supply is forthcoming and sufficient.

He does it also by removing hindrances and by the ministry of angels. What a fruitful subject this is and how full of comfort to His saints.

Will He do this, some one may ask? It is an absolute certainty. He has set His love upon Christians having a special interest in them for they are His. The portion of His inheritance. Their holiness is of great value in His sight, for they are costly objects of His affection. They cost God His Son, and the Son His life. To say that He has done much for them already goes without question. We cannot doubt it. Yet all this is only an earnest of continued preservation. We may rest confident that He will keep us from falling and present us without a spot before the presence of His throne.

His pledge is ours, that He will never leave us. Never, that is very broad. We often leave Him, but on our return we find Him ready to fulfil His promise. He is faithful that has promised. Does it ever occur to us that He has special interest in us—because we are the portion of His inheritance.

He has high and noble purposes to accomplish through His saints. What an inspiring thought that we His saints are co-workers with Him. Doing the very work He did when on earth and the same He would were He here now. His keeping extends to the cleanness of the character and lives of His saints. Their feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. He keeps them from falling and guides them in seasons of darkness, and is their light. In lonley places He is their companion. In sadness He is their comfort, and in the way of peace He walks with them. As saith the Psalmist He sitteth my feet upon a rock—that suggests strength and security, doesn't it.

How does He do all this? He provides the means of help. He gives them His word for their edification and strengthening. He gives them the weapon, "all prayer," which if used regularly and proper is a most efficacious weapon. Then they have fellowship one with another; and travelers know what that means. His watchful eye is over all and He imparts grace and strength according to their need.

His word is the pledge of the certainty of this. Ah, saints of God, as you trudge along on your journey heavenward, you are beset with difficulties, with dangers, with unseen yet powerful enemies, but remember the Master has set His love on you, and all these things that seem to be against you, are in reality for you. They are designed to secur your holiness which is of special value in His sight. Do you think for a moment that He who gave His life for you will not regard you with special affection. You are as dear to Him as the apple of His eye.

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord!
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word!
What more can He say, than to you He hath said—
To you, who for refuge to Jesus have fled?"

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
I will not—I will not desert to his foes;
That soul—though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never—no never—nonever forsake!"

JOANNES.

Mr. Gifford Pinchot Goes to The Heart of The Matter When He Asks That Congress Enact Sound Water-power Legislation.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Oakland, Md.

DEAR MR. SINCELL: The great War in which our Nation is engaged will be won not alone by food and men, but by mechanical power as well. Without mechanical power we could not make or move the weapons with which we fight—guns, ammunition, ships, and supplies. Our National resources of power, whether from coal, oil, or waterpower, are National War necessities. We need them to win the war.

In this gigantic struggle our security requires us to use all these great resources, and to use them wisely and well. The people of the United States own some fifty million undeveloped water horsepower, or about enough to run every train, trolley, factory, mill, mine, and electric power plant we have.

For ten years the friends of Conservation have urged the development of public waterpowers in the public interest. But development has been held back by a little group of waterpower magnates and their friends in Congress who have blocked all legislation which would not give them these valuable properties forever and for nothing.

Today, when the Nation needs all its resources, the same men who have been blocking reasonable waterpower legislation own and are holding millions of water horsepower undeveloped and out of use while clamoring for more.

The time has come when such obstruction threatens the Nation's safety and success. We need the development of these powers in War even more than in peace. At the coming session of Congress sound waterpower legislation should be enacted as a War measure, based upon principles fair to all sides. These principles I believe to be briefly as follows:

(1) The thing to do with waterpower is to develop it. Whatever retards or restricts the development of public waterpowers on terms fair to the public is against public policy and hostile to the general welfare.

(2) Waterpower belongs to the people. The sites where it is produced should always be held in public hands, for only so can effective control in the general interest be secured.

(3) Where public development is not desired, the right to use waterpower sights should be leased for periods long enough to permit sound, attractive, and profitable investment, but never longer than fifty years. At the end of each lease all rights should return to the people who gave them.

(4) In order to protect the consumer against extortion, rates and service should be regulated by Federal authority when State or local authorities fail to do so.

(5) Reasonably prompt and complete development and continuous operation, subject to market conditions, should be required. Already millions of water horsepower are held out of use to further monopoly by private corporation.

(6) Corporations or individuals who make money out of rights granted by the people should share their profits with the people.

(7) The public has a right to complete infoomation about every business based on the use of public property.

These are the principles for which the friends of conservation have been contending. Many waterpower men believe them to be fair and sound. They will, I hope, commend themselves to you as wise and reasonable. I am writing to ask your support for immediate legislation, based upon them, when Congress meets.

This is no time to give away public assets necessary for the welfare of our people both in the War and after the War; and we should no longer tolerate the selfishness of private interests which take the dog-in-the-manger position that they must have these waterpowers on their own terms, or no one shall use them at all.

As the President said: "The supreme test of the Nation has come. We must all speak, act, and serve together."

Sincerely yours,
GIFFORD PINCHOT.

PRAISES COUNTY PAPERS

President Woods of State College Talks of Their Influence.

Country newspapers are among the greatest assets in the development of a state, according to President Alfred Fred Woods of the Maryland State College. Dr. Woods is one man who recognizes the influence of a county paper in its community and intends to lend the aid of the Maryland State College for work along any lines various editors desire. He thinks the lines along which the State College intends to develop the resources of Maryland are identical with those by which newspapers must help to build up their communities. In this work Dr. Woods thinks there should be perfect cooperation between the College and the county press, because each will considerably influence the other. Says Dr. Woods:

"Probably the biggest individual influence in any community is the country newspaper. Under any and all circumstances it is the one agency which should have most to do with the building up of the resources of its particular territory and the influencing of the people to take up work for the general good. Of course, I realize that many problems arise in the management of a country newspaper, problems which sometimes are more difficult than those that confront the metropolitan press, but the paper which grows by reason of its altruistic tendencies, its willingness to devote its energies to the public good, develops on a sound basis. The fundamental aim of a newspaper is to carry the news of the day into the home, to keep the community abreast of the times, but no newspaper can lose sight of the development of its community and remain progressive and successful. The county papers of Maryland can render a big aid to the state and to their separate communities by helping the State College disseminate the news and information which will be of value to the farmer, the fisherman, the miner, the engineer or the chemist. Out in Minnesota the editors of the country press are lending almost untold aid in helping the University of Minnesota carry its work right into homes of the people, and I believe that the editors of Maryland will take the same attitude."

A Saxon-French Cigar Lighter.

Several years ago the then new minister of France, M. Klotz, decided to impose a tax of two francs, or 40 cents American money, on each cigar lighter used in that country. The reason for this is that the sale of matches in France is in the hands of the government monopoly and the portable lighters interfered with the sale of the matches. On the other hand the matches have become so bad in quality that they are subject of complaint and ridicule. The law has become unpopular and there is an effort now being made to have the order rescinded. Notwithstanding the fact that an increased tax was placed on tobacco by the French government several years ago, it has caused a tendency to increase smoking and that is proven by the many smokers to be seen in public places and thoroughfares.

"Oh—er—quite so! I'm pleased to meet you, I'm sure! But there's nobody dead at my place!"

"Nae, nae!" said the undertaker, smiling sweetly. "But I just heerd you cough, an' I hae hopes!"—London Answers.

"There's a Reason"

Meaning of Western Reserve.

The phrase Western Reserve means northern Ohio, but it originated in Connecticut. When Connecticut, in 1786, ceded her western lands to the United States she reserved a large tract adjoining Pennsylvania, now forming the northeastern corner of Ohio, which for several years was called the Connecticut reserve and then Western Reserve. Complete cession of the reservation was made in 1800.

Cliff Dwellers Still Exist.

Although the earliest cliff dwellers were prehistoric, cave dwellers have existed in almost every age of the world. The ancient Horites derived their name from their practice of living in caverns and subteranean abodes. An Arab tribe in Palestine still occupies the mountainous caves, and a tribe of cliff dwellers has been recently found in Mexico.

Penitential Psalms.

The term "penitential psalms" is applied to a group of seven psalms on account of the marked penitence they show. They are the Sixth, the Thirty-second, the Thirty-eighth, the Fifty-first, the One Hundred and Second, the One Hundred and Thirtieth and the One Hundred and Forty-third. The distinction of these from other psalms began in the early Christian times.

His Only Solution.

Richard was playing with a toy machine. His mother heard an unusual commotion and hurried to the room. On entering she found poor Pete, his doll, with a broken head. In reply to her questions as to what had happened to Pete, Richard only shook his head and mumbled each time: "Richie, ruff-neck."

Mamma Not Asleep.

The maid was dressing four-year-old Bobby. His mother was resting in an adjoining room. When she overheard her small boy say a naughty word, she called in severe tones, "Bobby, what do you say?" Quick as a flash he replied, "You are supposed to be sleeping, mamma."

It has been estimated that if the forests of the earth were completely stocked and scientifically worked they would yield annually the full equivalent to 120 times the present consumption of coal.

Going Up.

A device that enables a man to climb a steel cable to which it is attached by turning a bicycle pedal has been patented by a California inventor.

What's the Use?

It's mighty hard to live with folks who don't enjoy living, and there's no use trying to give people the kind of truth they aren't used to.

War Declared on Rats by U. S. Gov't

The government at Washington is preparing a campaign that should be effective in killing the rats that are so destructive both to lives and property. A conservative estimate places the loss of foodstuffs from rats at over two hundred million dollars annually, and in the present scarcity of food, this loss must be prevented. The most efficient way to "Kill the Rat" is by the use of Stearns' Paste, and thousands of dollars worth have been bought by the government. Every housekeeper troubled with rats, mice, roaches or waterbugs should buy a small box of this reliable exterminator for thirty-five cents, and stop further loss of food in her home. Adv.

They Just Had to Wait.

Something was the matter with the stop-signal bell of the Toonerville trolley car, and the conductor had to whistle to the motorman, that trip—one whistle to start, two whistles to go ahead.

This wasn't the real Toonerville trolley, but a certain suburban "dummy line" which is so denominated by the facetious car riders.

At one place, the other morning, the car made a long stop, and some of the passengers began to get uneasy. One sought the rear platform and found the conductor eating a frugal luncheon.

"Say, how long we goin' to stand here? What are we waitin' for?" asked the passenger.

The conductor swallowed hard and was understood to reply.

"Looky here, I ain't got nothin' but dry crackers fer my lunch. An' you'll hafter wait till I git 'em all swallered good before I kin whistle!"—Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

WOMEN SUFFERERS NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer a great deal with pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness and may be despondent and irritable.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, restores health to the kidneys and is just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a medium or large bottle immediately from any drug store.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper. Adv.

BILL'S DAD.

Our last sight of Bill wuz jest 'is back,
Far off in the distance, beneath 'is pack
Couldn't go t' th' train, his mother an' me,
A-makin' it harder fer Bill, y' see.
So we stood on the sidewalk an' watched 'em go—
Shoulder t' shoulder an row on row.
Bill couldn't speak but 'is head wuz high,
Ez he gave us a look an' waved "Good-by."
An' I couldn't help feelin', ez fathers will,
"Ef it only wuz me—instead uv Bill!"
We didn't say much at supper, that night,
An' mother seemed older—more feeble an' white,
But she stuck it out, somehow, ez brave ez could be;
Never thought uv herself, but allus uv me.
Then we seen in th' paper where Bill'd reached France,
An' off t' th' front at th' very first chance,
It told how the Frenchmen thanked God, on their knees,
When the Star Spangled Banner flew out on th' breeze.
Still I couldn't help feelin', ez fathers will,
"Ef it only was me—instead uv Bill!"
An' so it ran on, with a word now an' then,
That told us uv Bill an' th' rest uv th' men,
An' mother seemed older—more feeble an' white,
As we read in th' Bible a chapter at night.
The thing 'at hurt most though wuz Bill's empty chair,
Drawn up t' th' table ez if he wuz there,
We know he'll be back, when the world is set free,
An, we'll be together—Bill, mother an' me.
But I allus keep praying, ez fathers will,
"Fergit about us God—an' look after Bill."

Announcing the New Oakland Sensible Six

THE NEW OAKLAND SENSIBLE SIX IS HERE.

It is a continuation of the remarkably successful Oakland Sensible Six of the past three seasons, which has been annually refined, improved and strengthened so that now we are offering tomorrow's car to you today—the forerunner of the type of automobile that soon shall command America.

Scientific development of the engine now makes it more powerful, more speedy at the getaway, more active in traffic and more economical in use of fuel.

Improvements in the design of intake and exhaust manifolds secure the utmost power value from today's gasoline.

The overhead valve high-speed, six cylinder engine now delivers 44 horse power at 2600 r. p. m. or one full working horse power for every 48 pounds of car weight.

The new force feeding oiling system gives thorough lubrication to the vital moving parts of the engine.

Higher cooling efficiency has been obtained through the use of a larger pump and new bi-plane fan of powerful suction.

Proper design has contrived a full 106 inches of body room on the 112 inch wheelbase—affording seating capacity and leg room equal to that of many cars of much longer wheelbase.

Long, specially graded, semi-elliptic underslung springs and extra large tires give ideal riding comfort—accentuated by the deep genuine leather upholstery.

The fine appearance of the new Oakland Sensible Six is enhanced by a sloping windshield of new design; an oil gauge of pressure feed type on the dash; a deeper raidator; a higher body wall and the tire carrier at the rear of the car.

These are just a few of the features that contribute to the complete excellence of the new Oakland Sensible Six.

See all of them in the car itself at my store, at Gortner, Md. Call or phone for a demonstration.

Nov. 17, 1917.

To our Garrett county friends:

Thinking that probably our friends would be glad to see another letter in THE REPUBLICAN from some of the Garrett county boys in Camp Gordon, we will take time to write a short letter.

This is a beautiful day. such as the nice summer days in the North. The nights are rather chilly.

The camp is now entirely made up of Northern boys, except several thousand negroes that occupy one part of the camp. The boys are from Camp Meade, Camp Lee, Camp Dix, Camp Upton and Camp Devens. There have been about two thousand coming in daily for the last week. They all seem to like this camp but would sooner be closer home.

We all have a good word for the Y. M. C. A's. and the hospitality of the Southern people. The people of Atlanta furnish us with good entertainments in the different Y. M. C. A's. every evening. The boys that have been visiting the city often claim that the people have been very courteous to them. They often invite the boys home with them for dinner.

The Y. M. C. A. furnishes us with writing material, good literature, athletic goods, plenty of plays and motion pictures and religious services. Without the Y. M. C. A. this would be a life of all work and no amusements.

Saturday forenoon is the time that Major General Swift reviews the troops. We form in company line on the parade field and march past the staff of reviewers. There must have been about twenty-five thousand soldiers on the field this morning and many horses and mules. Saturday is also our regular inspection day. It surely keeps us busy keeping our guns, etc., clean or else do extra duty.

We had our regular weekly hike yesterday of about thirteen or fourteen miles. We have to drill hard, although you could not imagine it if you would hear us singing some of the parodies and songs that we sing. Following is a verse of one we sing:

"Army life am sholy soft,
Walk an' drill all day;
De only work we ever do
Is when we draw our pay."

We have thirty minutes every day to practice hiking songs. We sing on our hikes which make them seem short.

All of the Garrett boys seem to be enjoying this life as well as could be expected, although they're looking forward to the time when they can be back home.

SOUSA'S VISIT TO DETROIT

Great Bandsman Met With Enthusiastic Reception There.

Miss Veronica Rasche, of Oakland, who is connected with the Holland Girls' Orchestra in a tour of the country this winter, writing to her mother in Oakland a few days ago from the Hotel Statler, Detroit, gives a description of the reception tendered Sousa's band of more than three hundred pieces in that city upon its recent visit.

Miss Rasche plays the bass viol in the organization with which she is connected and will visit nearly every city of any consequence in the country during the coming months of the winter and next spring. The orchestra is composed exclusively of young ladies and is managed by a woman of great musical ability. The letter to Mrs. Rasche above referred to reads as follows:

This past week has been a very interesting one, as Sousa and his 300 piece Naval band were here, getting recruits. We participated in a big benefit given at the Armory here, and we also attended the Naval Ball and Sousa concert. It was a wonderful sight to see those 300 boys, and to hear them play his "Stars and Stripes Forever." Detroit went almost wild over the band and Sousa was wined and dined here at the hotel every night.

Last night, he and a big party were right down front, he shook hands with us all, and during the course of the evening we sang the first piece he ever had copyrighted, which we had prepared for the occasion, "Nail the Flag to the Mast." The people cheered so after it he had to get up and make a speech. He is surely a darling old man, and almost white now. I will send you a Detroit paper telling about it tomorrow. We were entertained last evening, by his two chief bandsmen, and a number of the other boys, one is color bearer and the rest were some of the highest officers, we had a very nice time and it was so interesting to hear of their adventures. Most of them have seen actual service and are anxious to go across to capture the "Kaiser." Its too bad it has to be, but they all seem willing and eager to be gone.

Well I must close. Best love to all at home and take good care of yourself,

Your loving VERONICA.

Dwelling Burned.

The new dwelling house of Chester Green, son of Simeon Green, of near Avilton, this county, was entirely destroyed by fire on last Thursday night. The origin of the fire is unknown. In addition to burning the building the fire consumed $150 in cash, 200 bushels of potatoes, which were stored in the cellar, a large quantity of canned goods, furniture and the wardrobes of the members of the family. Mr. Green carried an insurance of $800 on the property, which represents but a fractional part of his loss.

Order of Publication.

William M. Fike vs. Theodosia Savage, Roy Savage, Ray Savage, Lloyd Savage, Cora Friend and Walter Friend, her husband.
No. 2149 Equity in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is for the purpose of obtaining a decree for the sale of the real estate of McClellan Savage, late of Garrett county, deceased, and a distribution of the proceeds amongst the parties entitled to interest therein.

The bill states that McClellan Savage departed this life several years ago, intestate, possessed of a farm of 72 acres, more or less, located in said Garrett county, and left surviving him a wife, Mary F. Savage, and the following children, viz: Louis Savage, Ross Savage, Theodosia Savage, Lloyd Savage, Roy Savage, Ray Savage, and Cora Savage, now the wife of Walter Friend, all of whom are non residents of the State of Maryland.

The Bill then states that on the 6th day of October 1917, William M. Fike, the plaintiff, became the purchaser at Sheriff's sale of the undivided interest of the said Louis Savage, Ross Savage and Mary F. Savage.

The Bill then states that the land is not susceptible of partition amongst the parties without loss and injury, and that it will be necessary to make sale of the same in order to divide it.

The bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said property and that the proceeds of the same be divided and for general relief, and also prays for an order of publication against the non-resident defendants.

It is thereupon, this 13th day of November, 1917, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county once in each of four successive weeks before the 20th day of December, 1917, give notice to the said Theodosia Savage, Roy Savage, Ray Savage, Lloyd Savage, Cora Friend, and Walter Friend, her husband, all of whom are non-residents of the State of Maryland, of the object and substance of this Bill, and warning them to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 7th day of January, 1918, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not be passed as prayed.
